Saying it Sincerely

"Becoming God's Partner" By Pastor Mike Christian, River of Life Assembly of God. Member of the Nome Ministerial Association.

"When I first brought the Gospel to you and then went on my way, leaving Macedonia, only you Philippians became my partners in giving and receiving. No other church did this —Philippians 4:15 TLB

Don't miss the impact of this amazing statement: Paul said, "the only church that became my partners in giving and receiving were you Philippians. No other church did

Why didn't the other churches Paul established become partners in "giving and receiving?" It's because they didn't understand the laws of God concerning sowing and reaping. The Corinthians were a rough, carnal lot, and Paul said more to them about giving than any other church. Because of their lack of spirituality they needed the most encouragement to give.

But the Philippians were different. They knew the truths of "giving and receiving." This freed them to be liberal with their gifts. This is why they became Paul's partners: they knew when they gave, God would give back to them "pressed down, shaken together, full and running over" (Luke 6:38).

You and I should be Philippian givers. We should truly believe that if we are faithful in our giving, God will pour out his blessings on us, and that our needs will be met. I've heard some people say that they don't want anything in return from God when they give. They just want to give because they love him. This is a great attitude but it actually can break down under the pressure of everyday living. When we have bills that are coming or past due, we sometimes think, "I want to give, but I just can't afford it."

A true Philippian giver knows that when they give they will also receive. Actually, they will say, "I really can't afford not to give." More than anything, we should want to be the kind of person of whom God says, "Of all the Christians in your city, you are the one I can count on to be my partner."

My friend, if you're running short on finances, check your heart and see whether or not you're a Corinthian Christian or a Philippian Christian. Maybe it's not about the finances. Maybe it's about giving God more of your time and energy in helping to reach out to the lost souls around you. I promise you, if you and I are faithful in our giving (in every area of our life), the Lord God will continue to "meet all our needs, according to his glorious riches in Christ Jesus" (Philippians 4:19).

Blessings to you, in his holy name!

AFN honors Native leaders

By Laurie McNicholas

Among winners of President's Awards at the annual Alaska Federation of Natives convention held last week in Anchorage were the late State Senator Al Adams, selected for the Dr. Walter Soboleff "Warrior of Light" award; Steve Ivanoff of Unalakleet and his late wife. Zoe, chosen for the Hunter-Fisher Award; and Jacob Martin of Nome, recipient of the Roger Lang Youth Leadership Award. AFN President Julie Kitka presented the awards at a luncheon on Friday.

Adams was born and raised in Kotzebue and spent much of his life serving rural communities in Northwest Alaska. He was devoted to his wife Diane and their children Albert, Jr., Guy, Herbert, Michelle, Bart and Luke, and 10 grandchildren.

Adams represented the North Slope and northwest regions in the Alaska House of Representative for eight years, starting in 1980. He served in the State Senate from 1989 to 2000, representing the Bering Strait region in addition to regions to the north. He chaired the Senate Finance Committee and championed the Power Cost Equalization Program to reduce energy costs in rural Alaska.

The Dr. Walter Soboleff "Warrior of Light" award recognizes an Alaska Native individual who uplifts Alaska Native people by enriching their spirits and unifying them.

Steve Ivanoff was born to Ralph and Veronica Ivanoff in St. Michael and was raised in Unalakleet.

Zoe was born and raised in Kotzebue. She attended Covenant High School in Unalakleet, where she and Steve met. Her parents are Marie and Chuck Greene of Kotzebue.

Steve and Zoe engaged in year-round subsistence activities including caribou and moose hunting, egg gathering, crabbing, fishing and gardening. They taught their children, Kelsi, Ralph and Gage, how to properly take care of, put away and prepare food.

The couple embodies the values of respect, tradition, hard work and cooperation. Both have served on numerous regional boards and school boards in Alaska. Steve was re-elected to represent Bering Strait villages on the AFN board at last week's convention. The Hunter-Fisher Award recognizes Alaska Natives

Jacob Martin is of Ugiuvagumiut (King Island Eskimo) and of Russian descent. His parents are Guy and Blue Martin of Nome. Jacob graduated this year from Nome-Beltz High School, where he participated in numerous academic, athletic and extracurricular activities and organizations. He is a freshman at the University of Alaska Fairbanks, majoring in geological engineering.

Jacob spent four months helping the Shared Beringian Heritage Program plan a Youth Forum prior to the 2011 Beringia Days conference in Nome. He then served as the sole youth representative at the annual meeting to recommend project proposals for the Beringia Program. His ideas and suggestions helped benefit the Beringia region in Alaska and Chukotka

In 1979 he was elected to the board of the Bering Straits Native Corp., served as its president from 1983-1988 and remained on the board through 2006.

He chaired the AFN board of directors from 1981-1983.

In 1994 Johnson led the fight on behalf of the Native community to preserve the Native exemption in the Marine Mammal Protection Act and to include Section 119, which provides for a comanagement role for Alaska Native organizations in the subsistence harvest of marine mammals.

Johnson was instrumental in organizing the Eskimo Walrus Commission in 1978, the Indigenous Peoples Council for Marine Mammals in the early 1990s and the Nanuuq Commission in 1994.

Applications open for vacant Common Council seat

By Sandra L. Medearis

Mayor Denise Michels has put her foot down on an impending flap over the appointment of an applicant to a seat on Nome Common Council left vacant when Councilwoman Mary Knodel resigned. The resignation became effective Oct. 6.

City law says an appointment must be made within 30 days of a Council vacancy. Accordingly, the way Michels reads her calendar, the Council should meet no later than Monday, Nov. 5, to make the appointment. At a meeting of the Council Oct. 25, Michels set the date for Nov. 5 with applications closing Nov. 2

So far, as of Monday, Oct. 29, Kenneth Hughes and Tom Sparks had filed applications for appointment, according to Assistant City Clerk Bill Gartung. Hughes operates a local office for the General Refining Corp. Hughes buys gold from local mining operations. Sparks works with federal BLM and holds a seat on Nome Planning Commission. He has done gold mining. So what? Two incumbent council members must stand against challengers in a runoff election Nov. 6: Stan Andersen, challenged by Jim West Jr.; and Randy Pomeranz, challenged by Randy Oles. The City has been spending money with the city attorney concerning postponing the appointment until after the election.

Records concerning vacant coun-

Records concerning vacant council seat appointments show that the council has in the past shunned new blood, holding resignations until after elections to preserve the privilege to appoint, or appointing individuals already serving on other City panels, or outside applicants and offering the seat to an individual who had not applied.

"If we don't like the applicants, we can always extend it," Andersen offered. "No," Michels said. "It has to be within 30 days.

Councilman Louis Green Sr. once again asked for verification that the application deadline was Nov. 2 and the selection to fill Knodel's vacancy would happen Nov. 5.

"Yes," replied Michels.

The local mining community has voiced a demand for representation on City panels, especially the Nome Port Commission, an advisory board that proposes rules for Port of Nome, heavily used by suction dredgers, fishermen and cargo carriers.

Miner Cliff McHenry spoke to the issue during public comment, referring to a concern voiced in a recent Alaska Miners Association meeting that there was no one actively engaged in mining or fishing on the Nome Port Commission.

Michels said that "we have an apcontinued on page 4

Fog keeps Senator from visiting Diomede

By Diana Haecker

Senator Lisa Murkowski experienced first hand what Little Diomede residents go through every time they leave or want to return to the island: weather determines if their travel plans pan out.

Murkowski, accompanied by Major General Thomas Katkus, Adjunct General for the Alaska National Guard, and United States Coast Guard Rear Admiral Thomas Ostebo, planned to visit Nome and Little Diomede last Friday, Oct. 26. They never made it past Nome as heavy fog prohibited helicopter travel.

The purpose of their visit to Little Diomede was to divest the National Guard armory building to the Diomede Village Corporation and the Senator, a spokeswoman said, wanted to hitch a ride to the remote island to talk to people about issues.

But that didn⁵t work out. According to Andrea Gusty, Murkowski's spokeswoman, the Senator used the down-time to meet with Nome Mayor Denise Michels and City Manager Josie Bahnke. Murkowski then visited the Nome Elementary School and talked to fourth graders about elections, including holding a mock vote for president. Her tour through Nome then took the Senator to Nome-Beltz Jr./Sr. High School where she talked to the students about civics.

Around mid-afternoon, weather permitted boarding the National Guard plane that took the dignitaries back to Anchorage.

Gusty said the Senator would try again to travel to Little Diomede, weather permitting.

Earlier that week, Alaska Congressman Don Young was scheduled to arrive in Nome, but foggy weather also didn't allow planes to land on Monday, Oct. 22 and kept him from landing in Nome.

75 years NVFD: Fire Dept. traded horses for a fire truck responding to non-fire emergencies in October. Since the brigade achieved approval of its charter on Oct. 11, 1937, the department's volunteers have taken responsibility for putting out fires, rescuing fire victims, helping with search and rescue, boating emergencies, motor vehicle accidents and extending training and materials for fire prevention. At this month's evening of celebration Oct. 20, former mayor and honorary firefighter John K. Handeland saluted the volunteers who put in many hours of training, equipment maintenance and preparation when they are not fighting fires. "Nome's Volunteer Fire Department has been manned by hundreds of dedicated volunteers over the years that have dedicated their time and risked their lives for the safety of our community," Handeland said. "Since its inception, and to this day, the community has relied on the efforts of a dedicated group of volunteers to protect the citizenry from the perils of fire."

The organization of the modern fire department came after Nome's conflagration in 1934 and the subsequent second-guessing, Handeland said. The fire occurred at a time when firefighters used bucket brigades and the department equipment traveled on the energy of horses, not yet retired by the arrival of the 1937 Chevrolet fire truck a few years later.

"In September 1934, a significant fire erupted – and within a short time, the very existence of Nome was threatened as the flames jumped from building to building ravaging wide swaths of the community," Handeland said. "With winds whipping the flames and spreading the fire quickly, the horse-drawn fire carriage owned and operated by the city was powerless to get the blaze under control. The only solution was to create fire breaks to attempt to break the fire's path of spread. Civil authorities determined that several buildings in the potential track needed to be removed. Buildings were leveled with dynamite and available bulldozers.

"Luckily, winds switched directions and subsided, and the fire was eventually put or burned itself out. Anecdotes heard over time indicate that much armchair quarterbacking occurred thereafter...questioning the actions of the fire department in leveling buildings that ultimately would not have been impacted by fire.

"As a result of the 1934 fire, unfortunately, written accounts of early activity of any kind, including fire history, was to a large part destroyed

I was wondering how many of us in the region were a bit discouraged about the PFD this year. Don't misunderstand my intent and think me ungrateful, au contraire. I just would like to relate for your readers' consideration how to have a greater PFD next year. Quit smoking.

The benefits of quitting smoking have been known for a long time. But when a person considers the economic costs on a personal and state level should be considered.

A package of cigarettes can cost about $8.00 in Nome and up to $10.00 in the villages. If a person who smoked a half a pack a day were to quit they would save from $1,550 to $1,825 a year!

That is over double the PFD this year. Granted that is not a new four wheeler, but it would buy the gas for one for quite a while.

Looking at a bigger picture what does smoking cost Alaska?

The cost in Alaska of healthcare directly attributed to tobacco is $169 million. Medicaid provided care in Alaska directly attributed to tobacco is nearly $77 million. That is state and federal supported healthcare that everyone with an income pays for. Nearly 500 persons die annually in Alaska from tobacco, and there are now 18,000 kids who now smoke who will die prematurely due to to-Let's all save some money, maybe we'll get a bigger PFD. And we can save some lives. Quit smoking

To the editor:

This is an open letter to Northern Norton Sound salmon fishers. A disaster declaration in 2000 chum salmon escapement/harvests did not meet projected population by the Alaska Department of Fish and Game. A $2.3 million grant was dedicated to restore and enhance chum salmon stocks in the Northern Norton Sound chum salmon fishery. An additional $1 million was provided by NSEDC to the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game who manage the chum fishery under the "dual-management scheme" with the Feds in Alaska. A Tier II chum salmon fishery was implemented because the 4,354 minimum needed chum salmon harvest was not met. Since 2001, the Nome subdistrict rivers and streams (7) have not met escapement projections for chum salmon.

However, in 2007, the Alaska Department of Fish and Game "lifted" the Tier II harvest program. A diversity of other fish stocks has evidently "replaced" the chum salmon. In the meantime, there has been no restoration project implemented to increase the chum salmon stocks in Northern Norton Sound. And consequently there was no enhancement. Counting fish does not restore or enhance chum salmon stocks. If you are a chum salmon fisher, you should be concerned. Thank you,

Election 2012: No Unguarded Moments

Thankfully, we don't live in a "battleground" state where we'd be bombarded with robo calls, assaulted with obnoxious TV ads and assorted weird opinions and spurious "facts." Election Day is upon us and we have the responsibility of exercising our vote. This Presidential Election is probably one of the most contentious in our history. Where else does big money try so hard to buy our vote and where else is the electorate so exposed to such blatant stupidity in the face of ignorance.

A camera at a Boca Raton, Florida fundraiser captured Republican candidate Mitt Romney in a candid moment saying he didn't care about 47 percent of Americans who don't pay income taxes. — Whoa! There are no such things as unguarded moments. Sometimes the garbage bag leaks and stinks. We don't want a President who does not care about 47 percent of the population— those of us who are retired, in school, or too young to earn a wage because they are still in elementary school. The Republican campaign has capitalized on the absurd. Some of their candidates are quite ignorant about women's reproductive issues, really stupid about rape. Their party platform on women's issues is Neanderthal. Their understanding of basic science and concern for education is stuck in the 1930s. They want to destroy our government piece by piece, rule by rule, law by law until we remove the benefits for ordinary citizens and promote uncontrolled big business. The Republicans have presided over the demise of the middle class while promoting the rich guys' inflated bank accounts.

Let's look at what is best for the people of the United States and put Democratic President Barack Obama back in office. And while we are at it, let's dump the Tea party obstructionists who do nothing but try to take away the process that makes us the greatest nation on earth. Vote for Barack Obama so we can move forward. -N.L.M.—

UAF research icebreaker launched in Wisconsin

The research icebreaker R/V Sikuliaq is one big splash closer to arriving in Alaska.

Hundreds of people, including Nome's Marine Advisory Program representative Gay Sheffield and Perry Pungowiyi of Savoonga, endured wind and rain last week to attend the christening and launch ceremony for the 261-foot vessel, the first built for the National Science Foundation in more than three decades. Savoonga whaling captain and member of the ship's oversight committee, Perry Pungowiyi gave the invocation. The crowd stood back and cheered as the Sikuliaq slid into the Menomonee River, sending an impressive spray of water over the dock.

The icebreaker is owned by the National Science Foundation and will be operated by the University of Alaska Fairbanks School of Fisheries and Ocean Sciences.

The ship was designed by Seattle-based Glosten Associates and was built by Marinette Marine Corporation. Construction work will continue throughout the winter.

UAF is slated to take control of the ship next summer. It is expected to arrive in its homeport of Seward by January 2014.

"R/V Sikuliaq is one of the most advanced research vessels in the world," said NSF director Subra Suresh. "Its capabilities to operate in extreme ecosystems will serve the science and engineering research communities for decades to come, while providing opportunities for educators and students to learn firsthand about the arctic environment."

Construction of the nearly $200 million vessel was funded primarily through the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act. The Sikuliaq is the first research vessel built for the NSF since 1981 and will be the only ship in the national academic fleet rated for year-round operations in first-year ice. The vessel's name is an Inupiaq word meaning "young sea

The name was chosen to reflect both the university's focus on arctic research and Alaska heritage.

The Sikuliaq is uniquely equipped for operating in ice-choked waters. Its reinforced double hull, two rotating thrusters and scalloped propeller blades will enable it to break through ice up to 2.5 feet thick. The ship will also be outfitted with the latest technology for oceanographic research, including advanced navigation systems, acoustic mapping systems and sensors, and systems for deploying a wide array of science equipment into and out of the water.

The Sikuliaq will primarily support oceanographic research in polar and sub-polar regions of the world.

"It's a wonderful platform for doing oceanographic and fisheriesrelated research in the Arctic, in the Bering Sea and in areas we have not been able to go or have only been able to go at really great expense,' said UAF Chancellor Brian Rogers.

"It certainly will grow UAF but more importantly, it will grow the knowledge of the Arctic. That's what is really important about this. It's not just about us; it's about the future of arctic science."

Two UAF emeriti served as cosponsors for the Sikuliaq: Vera Alexander, dean emerita of the School of Fisheries and Ocean Sciences, and Robert Elsner, professor emeritus.

Both scientists have spent decades lobbying for a research vessel designed for science operations in the Arctic. Alexander christened the ship and Elsner initiated the side-launch of the 261-foot vessel into the Menominee River.

plication procedure, but folks don't

McHenry cited the recent filling of a port panel vacancy left with the resignation of a former Crowley Fuel Distribution employee.

"Mr. Hafner [Bob Hafner, 20 years a miner] applied. He wasn't appointed," McHenry said.

The departing commissioner, Cam Kristenson, had "requested they have someone on there that knew about fuel," Michels said.

Michels appointed the other applicant for the port seat, Doug Johnson, a Nome Joint Utility System employee who oversees delivery of the utility's fuel.

"Mr. Hafner applied. He met the criteria. He was not appointed," Michels said.

In other business, the council adopted ordinances to permanently ink in budget revisions to close the books for spending year 2011.

City finances manager Cussy Kauer plopped her books and notes on the table and took a seat prepared for questions, but the council had no questions. Andersen asked the City administration to make sure copies of the budget materials were available at City Hall and Kegoayah Kozga Library for public inspection.

Finally, the Council approved a bid award to Bonanza Fuel a subsidiary of Sitnasuak Native Corp., to warm the City facilities and fuel vehicles. Bonanza was the only bidder, according to City Clerk Tom Moran. The fuel distributor will supply #1, grade one, heating oil at $5.51; equipment fuel, $5.78; unleaded gasoline, $5.30; vehicle diesel fuel, $5.49. To underscore what Nome residents already know about rising fuel costs, a historical fuel bid summary showed that the City paid around $3.50 for heating and vehicle fuel five years ago.

Bye bye, Rustler

During public comment, miner Mike Benchoff protested an order, he said singled him out for special treatment, to remove his tugboat mining dredge Rustler from the harbor earlier than a previously set date of Oct. 31. Benchoff received a letter advising him he was being fined $500 per day effective Oct. 26 until he removed the vessel. A number of other miners—Isabella Baer-Benchoff, Spenser McCleskey, Steve Benchoff and Cliff McHenry—spoke on Benchoff's behalf, including verification that Benchoff's craft was not the only vessel remaining in the harbor midweek.

The City was attempting to close the harbor early, City Manager Josie Bahnke said, in front of early freeze up. The deadline applied to homeported vessels, she said. People who commented cited other dredges still present in the harbor, including Crowley fuel operators.

Benchoff has since received a letter extending the deadline to Oct. 31.

"If he is not out of the water or headed south by Nov. 1, we will assess the $500 per day fine per the tariff," Bahnke said Monday by e-mail.

Benchoff accused the City of corrupt practices—unconstitutional ordinances, hiding records, allowing a City vehicle to be driven by a driver under the influence, failing to back salmon enhancement.

"Once in the spotlight of the world, corruption issues will dominate the airwaves," Benchoff said, urging the Council to take issues seriously as "the people were going to take only so much of it."

Councilman Jerald Brown took Benchoff's concerns seriously, telling him to come across with facts that could be acted upon and not general accusations.

Pomeranz addressed the issue during final comments.

"All these accusations, please bring them forward in fact," he said. "This is not the way the City should be operated ... we do need to work with miners in this community and work it out."

Bahnke said that the City has a system to address complaints and all are examined.

"We ask for dates and details. No complaint is unaddressed," she said.

Concerns with the operation of Port of Nome should properly go to the Port Commission, Michels said.

Bahnke said the City has a procedure to release public information.

The current policy requires a member of the public to submit a request in writing for each document and wait three days.

Press attorney John McKay told the Nugget this should not be necessary when one wanted to inspect public records.

Several City officials—Josie Bahnke, Councilman Randy Pomeranz, Lucas Stotts, assistant harbormaster—stayed after the meeting to discuss possible infractions concerning a Suburban vehicle operated by Port of Nome. Bahnke informed Stotts a sign-out sheet should be maintained for Port of Nome vehicles.

In other business, Michels noted a letter included in the packet in which she urged a "yes" vote on a government bond issue that would provide money for port infrastructure statewide, including money for Port of Nome expansion and updates.

"If voters say "yes" to these bonds, the project that will be built in our own community will be the Port of Nome improvements, including the design and construction of extending the causeway to meet the demands of increased ocean vessel traffic," Michels said. That would bring jobs to the community, she added.

Mining the miners

In public comment, McHenry reminded the Council that not a lot had been made of the positive affect on Nome's economy delivered by the summer's gold rush of miners.

Several city officials acknowledged that fuel and food sales were up. Kauer, head of finances, said that the City had reaped increases in sales tax.

Fuel oil was a major player in sales tax figures, Kauer said. Her figures showed an increase in fuel tax at $198,000, sales tax from food up by $36,900, and sales tax from restaurants, up by $17,000.

The Council asked for a report on mining effects on the local economy.

"I'd like us to be a little more friendly to miners," councilwoman Josie Stiles said in final comments. "We appreciate them. Mining is our thing here."

"I didn't know we were doing anything unfriendly," Andersen said.

Diesel fuel removed from grounded vessel in St. Michael

By Sandra L. Medearis

Multiple agency responders are taking care of the tugboat Captain Hendren that remains listing on the rocks two miles off St. Michael since it went hard aground in rough seas on Oct. 12.

Global Diving and Salvage, hired by owner Lee Hendren, has taken 460 gallons of diesel fuel from the boat along with sheened-up water from the engine room and lubricants, according to John Abel of the state Dept. of Environmental Conserva-

"The fuel is [removed] and the threat of fuel contamination in the St Michael area is past, on the response end," he said. "Now it is a salvage response, not an imminent danger to the environment and the people of St. Michael.'

Salvage crews will deal with batteries and other solid items next.

Abel expected the tugboat owners at Hendren Towboat Co. of Oregon to work with a salvage company using their expertise to plug the boat and take it to a port of refuge

The U.S. Coast Guard, DEC, and at the local level, St. Michael's Village Police Officer are coordinating efforts and have developed a unified response.

We tell the responsible party owner Lee Hendren-what is needed and he finds qualified people for subcontracts," Abel added.

Nick Lupsin, village police officer in St. Michael, said to the best of his knowledge the vessel is not salvageable. Removal is slated for next

However, Petty Officer 1st class Alex Olbert said Monday the USCG was currently working with the owners of the vessel-Hendren Towboat Co. of Portland— to develop a plan for salvage and to determine the ves-

Agencies gave the fuel to the village-five drums to Lupsin and four drums to another man. They would share the fuel with others, Lupsin

It is #2 stove oil, not the best to burn in the winter because it jells up in the cold. "It would be good for spring and summer," Lupsin said.

Gold miner J. Brent Tuttle, captain, and Wayne Miller, engineer, went aground in the boat in storm winds and water as they headed for St. Michael to put the vessel in winter storage before freeze-up.

"We were surprised to see them so close to shore," Lupsin said. "That reef goes out three miles. Once they were there, they didn't have a chance in that weather because the further out they went, the bigger the waves.'

Unalakleet hosts regional youth leader training

By Aprille Pitt, Kawerak Inc.

Despite the strong wind and weather delays on October 5, over 50 youth from the Bering Strait Region arrived in Unalakleet for the 4th annual Youth Leaders Training.

They joined a group of about 14 Youth Leader captains who arrived a day earlier for additional training.

The group gathered for a weekend filled with team building activities, youth leadership training and various sessions from being a positive role model, to tobacco safety, healthy relationships and community outreach.

The youth who participate in Youth Leaders stand out from other groups because they are peer-chosen. Students in their schools were asked the simple question, "Who would you talk to if you had a problem?"

They listed names and those were the chosen Youth Leaders. The importance of being peer-chosen was a common theme during the training. Being chosen as a youth leaders was a clear indicator that these students were trusted and respected people in their school ers program is that these are the people in the school who set the tone and culture of their school.

When students feel empowered in their schools, they will be the ones leading change.

If youth decide that they don't want to see bullying, they will be the ones to speak out against a bully. They will help guide younger students to make healthy choices and help them recognize it's "cool" to be a positive force in the school.

Youth are also the first line of defense when problems arise.

Teens are more likely to speak to a peer when they have a problem than to an adult.

That's why a large portion of time in training is dedicated to being a good listener and learning how to get help when needed for a friend.

Youth were armed with resources and knowledge to work with their peers as well as with younger stu-

The weekend wrapped up with a dance for the youth to celebrate the hard work and dedication that will be shown throughout the school year.

School Board tackles poor reading scores

By Kristine McRae

Some startling figures popped up at the Nome School Board's work session on Oct. 23. Scores from recent MAP (Measures for Academic Progress) tests indicate that more than half of fifth and sixth graders struggle significantly with reading. The data, which is combined from scores recorded last spring and this fall, shows that 82 percent of fifth graders and 92 percent of sixth graders are reading below their grade levels. In the lower grades, the numbers were closer to 60 percent of students reading below their level. The junior high and high school readers were at 75 percent and 60 percent below level, respectively.

Superintendent Mike Brawner said that he is shocked but not discouraged by the figures. "This is what the data is for, to show us where we need to focus our attention. We need to look at the content areas for reading. Our curriculum may not focus on what's being tested, so we need to work with the teachers to see what we need to do differently." The data, he said, gives the school district that target. Whether that target is incorporating different material, different techniques, or more instruction time, Brawner is interested in "looking at what's going to give us the most impact for our efforts."

The MAP data also tracks growth data on the students. The growth data is based on a statistical norm that measures how much each student progresses from year to year. The percentages of students district-wide who achieved typical growth hovers around 50 percent. That is, nearly half of all Nome students are meeting a typical growth rate; they're just doing it below their grade level. Exceptions to this growth are in the 10th and 11th grade, where 25 percent are meeting growth rate standards.

One factor in the testing outcome remains a constant: attendance. Some teachers have put together data that shows how low attendance adversely affects test scores and academic progress.

Brawner said not all students who have low attendance do poorly, but poor attendance is closely related to poor academic achievement.

THE DOCK WALK

For the last time this season, Harbormaster Joy Baker is taking Nome Nugget readers on the dock walk before the Port of Nome and the small boat harbor button up for the winter. Baker had spent the past week at a conference of the Alaska Association of Harbormasters and Port Administrators in Sitka.

The floating docks have been pulled out of the water, as have the channel buoys and the city's boat, The Guardian. Baker reports that a few of the bigger gold dredges, like the Christine Rose, have hauled out of the water. The Diamond Z headed to Naknek. All fishing boats and all of the large dredges are out of the water, except for the vessel formerly known as the Rustler, now called Conaca.

A few smaller gold dredges are still at work as they are small enough to be easily trailered out on the beach, if necessary.

Fog and low hanging clouds obscured the sky for a few days last week but the water has been calm. Two mainline fuel barges arrived in Nome last week, delivering more fuel to the port and harbor tanks. On Saturday, Alaska Logistics barge arrived in Nome to backhaul containers to Seattle. At last, a couple of Shell support vessels called on the Port of Nome and were still in the port as of Monday.

Baker wishes a safe and warm winter to all from the Port of Nome and its employees.

Nanook swimmers place at Regional finals in Fairbanks

By Coach Kirsten Bey

All six members of the high school swim team traveled to Fairbanks for regional finals last week-Nome-Beltz High School swimmers continue to show that hard work and practice pay off. Although the Nome Nanook swimmers have minimal opportunity to compete during the season, they do know what to do when they show up at a swim meet.

All swimmers did a fine job. Klay Baker earned an individual medal, taking third place in the 100vard backstroke event. Klav also earned a medal last year as part of the third place team in the 200-yard medley relay. Unfortunately, this year the team didn't have enough swimmers for relay events.

Zach Sullivan, competing in his final high school swim meet, made a personal best in the 100-yard breaststroke, finishing fifth overall and earning points for the team with a time of one minute and 15.35 seconds, taking more than 15 seconds off his time over the past few years.

Jake Stettenbenz also finished fifth overall and earned points for the team in the 100-yard freestyle with a time of 55.66 seconds.

Sullivan and Stettenbenz also placed in consolation finals in other events: Stettenbenz placed seventh overall in the 50-yard freestyle and Zach finished ninth overall in the 50vard freestyle.

All three of the girls were able to swim consolation finals in each of their events: Tori Thomas finished ninth overall in the 100-yard breaststroke and eighth overall in the 100yard backstroke. Lacy Erickson finished ninth overall in the 50-yard freestyle and ninth overall in the 100-yard backstroke.

Miranda Murphy, also competing in her final high school swim meet, finished 11th overall in the 50-yard freestyle and eighth overall in the 100-yard freestyle.

tos of all the participating teams. It would be easy for the Nome swimmers to feel out-numbered and outmatched, seeing teams with 20, 30 or even 40 swimmers. However, the

that they can hold their own with these other, bigger teams and Nome can be very proud of its high school swimmers.

Nome Nanooks produce solid performance in Anchorage

By Stephen Palmatier

The Nome Nanooks wrestling team finished a very respectable eighth place in last weekend's ACS Wrestling Tournament in Anchorage, considered to be the biggest tune-up to the 1A2A3A State tournament. Forty-four wrestling teams from around the state competed.

The Nanooks came off a very good performance at the Bush Brawl in Kotzebue and wanted to show that they were a team to be reckoned with. The Nanooks produced one champion, a second place and a third place finisher in last weekends tournament. Emery Booshu won the 132pound weight class, defeating Joseph Kohler of New Stuyahok in the final round in a 5-1 decision. Booshu, who was the state champion last vear, continues to lead the Nanooks squad strong and is poised to repeat the feat this season.

Alex Grey finished in second place in the 98-pound class. Grey fell in a 0-0 match to Seth Hutchison of Skyview. The tiebreaker was decided by what is known as the "Ultimate Tie Breaker"

Leif Erikson finished in third place in the 113-pound weight class.

Bethel High School won the tournament it wasn't even a close call. Bethel scored a total of 258.5 points, defeating the second place team (Kotzebue) by 81 points. In third place was Valdez rounding out the top five were Dillingham and Skyview High Schools.

The Bethel team crowned two champions with Brayton Lieb winning the 152-pound weight class and Trevour Chavez winning the 160pound class, along with three second place finishes. Kotzebue's team boasts two champions with Brettlyn Reich winning the 113-pound class and Scott Hansen taking the 138pound class.

Dedication and many hands restore NVFD's first fire truck

By Sandra L. Medearis

A beautifully restored 1937 Chevrolet fire engine served as centerpiece of a recent gala celebrating the men and women who have volunteered to serve the community at the Nome Volunteer Fire Department.

Firefighters thanked Troy Miller of Nome Public Works department for using magic to get the vehicle through the doors of the Nome Rec Center so it could sit in all its glory reflecting off the gym floor.

Frank Richardson, many years an active member of Nome Volunteer Fire Dept., attended the NVFD 75th Anniversary celebration with his spouse, Dolores Richardson.

During the gala evening Oct. 20, Richardson took the podium to tell firefighters and their friends how he got roped into helping restore the 1937 Chevrolet.

"I joined the department in 1958. Chief Martin came across the street one day, and said, 'you live really close by here. We really need someone to man the water pump. You look like you would be a good man.' So I signed up then and there.

"At the time there was no sewer and water hooked up, but we had a salt water line that ran the length of Front Street. It was a salt water system. You had to go through and test it every fall, to inspect the pipes. Then you had to make sure you got all the water out of it to make sure it wouldn't freeze up before spring. So, the front of city hall, they had a stanchion. We ran lines many times from the front of the old city hall through the salt water system for a long way, several blocks, to hook up to this truck to use as a pump for a

"By and by, the 1937 truck was sold as surplus. Chuck Reader took it down to Cape Nome to pump saltwater to wash down aggregates for his concrete plant. It sat down there for quite a number of years. Then he made a change in his operation. The truck went to Jerry Cunningham and then passed to Johnny Reader who took the fire truck to his camp at Safety, so he'd have something to put a fire out. So the truck was sitting there.

"When the old fire truck came into town, it was looking pretty ragged. On the way to town it caught on fire and had to be towed the rest of the way. And Chuck took that truck and—I don't know where he put it-he may have put it in a storage place he had.

"One day, some boys, Buffy [Angelo Buffas Sr.], Warren Little, several members of the department came to see me one day. I had retired from the highway department. They wanted me to help them restore the 1937 Chevrolet fire truck.

'No, the last time I saw that, it wasn't looking too great,' I told them. 'No, I don't think so.'

"About a week or 10 days went past. They said, 'Are you sure you don't want to work on that old truck?' "'No, I don't believe I do. It's a tremendous project,' I told them. "'Well, if you don't want to do anything with it, we're going to send it to Seattle and have it restored down there!

"I said, OK, but I'm sort of knowledgeable about things of that nature, so you had better send about $150,000 with it when you send it over there.'

They didn't think it would take that kind of money. 'We're going to send it out on the last barge,' they said. So the last barge came and went—it was the end of September."

They had a deal for him. "One day they said, 'Come on down to the Polar Cub and we'll buy you a cup of coffee. 'You aren't doing anything,' they said 'We want you to rebuild that old fire truck."

"I said, 'well, I haven't seen it for a long time.

Let's go take a look at it.'
"They had put this old fire truck in the old Nome Public Schools office building across from the Nome Fire Hall [on Bering Street]. It had been there for, I don't know—a couple years?

The reason they hadn't put it on the barge was because after they put it in the building, the brake drums had welded to the brake shoes so the wheels wouldn't roll anymore. "The building it was sitting in, after they put the truck in there, had sunk. They couldn't get the doors open anymore to get into it. Someone had had a little fun with the oil tank that was lying on the ground outside.

The furnace hadn't been running for four or five years. "'Well, how many people,' I said, 'are we going to have that will get their tools here and work on this truck? We're going to have to take this truck totally apart.

Everything has to come off it. The body panels and the fenders were riveted on.

"They said, 'we'll be there, we're going to do it, we really are! 'OK, I'll start working on the building, we'll se if we can get a little heat in here.' So a bunch of guys came over to jack up the building so we got the doors to open and close.

I worked on the building that week to be ready for work on the truck to take it apart.

"On Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, there were 15, 16 people there, volunteers! We got most of it done. By Sunday afternoon, that old truck was totally torn apart. Wheels were off, axles were off, engine was out, water pump was off, and all the rivets were out. Parts were lying around and it was the down to frame. "Monday, we carried the frame over to Alaska Cab Garage. They sand blasted it and brought it back. Then we primed it, painted it. "Eventually they gave me a credit card—big mistake—and credit for $10,000, like it was a lot of money. I told them 'this is nothing. You guys are just getting in the door for $10,000.

"They said, 'we have $10,000 to back it up and we'll see if we can go

It was a mess.

'So, for example, when it sat down on the beach, someone came along and used everything on it that would break for target practice.

That spotlight you see sitting on the side, that searchlight? It had no glass, no reflector, nothing but a shell with three bullet holes in it.

I called people in Seattle, Washington and told them what we had. "He said, 'How particular are you, whether that is exactly like it was in 1934? That light was produced in 1927. They manufactured it until 1939 and there are no parts left.'

"If some guy from Paris comes by and says 'I want to see that old truck.' then says that spotlight was not on there in 1937, that's going to be his problem, not mine.

"That spotlight on there cost $1,060 to make it look like that. The headlights had been shot out. Those parts were also not around, so I had those redone by the same person that redid the searchlight. They were $850 each.

"Bobby Morse probably put the most hours into put that truck back to the way it is now. I want to remember him, he's has passed on. I want to remember another who has passed on who helped on that truck, and that is Tommy Johnson, and Chuck Lewis, Bobby Lewis. They are all gone.

They really helped out.

"The truck would run, the engine would run, but the fire pump was not assembled.

Tommy Johnson put the fire pump back together. "So it's good to see this old truck is an old time Nomeite. There's only one way you get to be an old time Nomeite. That's when everybody who remembers when you came here, has left town one way or an-

NSSP will buy tomcod and trout this winter!

A great opportunity for fishermen & women, young & old!

Winter is almost here, and Norton Sound Seafood Products (NSSP) will be purchasing line-caught fish, including tomcod and trout, as soon as there is enough ice to allow for safe fishing. This fishery is open to anyone 10 or older and is a great opportunity to earn income while getting outside. Tomcod should be plentiful and relatively easy to catch.

Let NSSP help you get your start! A commercial fishing permit is needed to deliver to NSSP. For help with getting the appropriate permit or for information on the fishery: stop by the Nome plant, call 855-443-2304 (443-2304 in Nome), visit www.nsedc.com or contact your local NSEDC liaison. Whether you are an elder or a student, this is a great opportunity!

 and recorded only in the minds of those who experienced it, which over time left the area or have passed on.
 We are fortunate that there have been ancestors of some of the early residents who have returned records they did save to fill in some of the gaps – and also to have had local residents, who committed their recollections to paper," Handeland said.

The late Ella Tanner, as well as Caroline Reader provided their memories of the fire of 1934 to the Nugget reporter Laurie McNicholas in 2009. Her article and their memories are in the Nome Nugget archives.

Former residents Frank Richardson and Curtis E. Jacobs attended the NVFD 75th Anniversary banquet celebration to share their memories with today's firefighters and their friends.

After the 1934 fire, the city administration discussed ordering new horses. A fire committee suggested motorized equipment, but the mayor broke a 3-3 tie on the issue to continue to operate with horses, so an equipment order arrived: horses, feed, a siren, and 500 feet of 1-1/2 in hose

"Upon their arrival —as I think still happens sometimes today — it was found a bill of goods had been sent to the far off land – the horses were too light and unfit for use as a fire team," Handeland said.

The firefighters were still using a fire sled in 1936, but it had problems, according to Handeland. Going over ice, the sled would at times turn over. In 1937, complaints about the fire department operation from a large property owner, Hammon Consolidated Gold Fields, spurred the suggestion at the city level that they consider a volunteer fire department. Seattle Fire Dept. offered training. The city decided the volunteer fire department should operate on wheels instead of horses' hooves. A fire engine that cost $3,720 FOB Seattle rolled onto a northbound barge. Alaska Steamship Co. brought the fire truck to Nome for $50.

It arrived in July 1937. Curtis E. Jacobs remembers the day when he and his sisters went down to Lomen brothers' dock to see the truck come off the barge. "This was the first motorized fire truck in town," Jacobs said. "It was quite a deal. Everybody went down there to watch the fire department turn on the unit, test all the pumps, and see how the machine would work. I found it pretty interesting."

Jacob's father, Curtis Jacobs, helped to start the NVFD, according to Jacobs.

Jacobs remembered fires he witnessed growing up for a while in Nome—some with tragic outcome and others, like when Eli Nikolai's manure storage container caught fire and burned for several days.

"The smell went all over town," he said.

At the end of the summer of 1937, the fire horses had run out of feed. The city sold them for $90. Workers tailored the fire department building to accommodate new kind of equipment-the fire engine. The idea of a volunteer fire department grew. Councilman Polet started working to organize a volunteer fire brigade. Working with Norvin Lewis, 15 men signed up who became charter members when the city council adopted an ordinance creating the Nome Volunteer Fire Dept. on Oct. 11, 1937. While initially a group of fire fighters, as time progressed, NVFD has become more proactive, advocating fire safety and prevention in an effort to prevent a fire, not have to respond to put it out," Handeland said. "The distribution of fire detectors to Nome homes has literally been a lifesaver in many cases.

"As a result of these efforts, the community thankfully has seen a significant reduction in fire destruction," he said.

The NVFD has seen a marked transformation.

With advanced equipment and training, the days of the fire department simply trying to insure a fire didn't spread to an adjoining structure are gone – and if the fire department is called early enough, most fires in recent time have resulted in minor repairable damage.

NVFD volunteers have had to face some large fires, just the same: Alaska Gold power plant in the 1970s, the Kawerak/Bering Straits building in the 1980s, the Lawyer's Apartment fire and the Reindeer Plant in the 1990s, a couple of power plant fires, Larry's Auto.

NVFD personnel also fly to assist off-road villages in fighting fires. Crews drove and flew to Teller July 12 to help control a fire that had taken four buildings and threatened to take the town.

Strictly limited to men by its original charter, NVFD members lobbied to admit women firefighters. The first to join was Penny Jack, who served NVFD for 16 years. Others followed, including current member Mackenzie Oles, whose father, Randy Oles, also serves the department

The NVFD receives support from city tax coffers, but also garners its own support from fundraiser activities and state and federal grant money.

In the past year, the NVFD received $75,000 from state Legislature for portable equipment to take to villages and remote areas to assist in firefighting.

In February, Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. announced it was granting NVFD $75,000 for firefighting equipment that would be stored in flight-ready packs also to fight fires in the region's communities outside of Nome. The department said that it should be able to respond to fires within the region within two hours if weather and flights permit. "In addition to raising funding for much of the department's needs, the volunteers also were responsible for the construction of the Nome Fire Hall," Handeland said.

"From the foundation to the walls to the roof to the hose tower, to the concrete aprons - this was all accomplished as a volunteer labor of love by your local firemen.' As usual, the department will hold its annually awaited fundraiser, the Nome Fireman's Carnival on the first Saturday of December, slated for Dec. 1 this year. The carnivals raise money for specialized equipment, turnout gear and other needs of the department. At the Carnival, family fun comes from cake walks, a turkey wheel, the raffle, bounce-house, lots of other fun activities, eating barbecue dinners and food at other concessions. The top of the evening for raffle ticket holders occurs when the department draws for someone to win a new snowmachine as well as other nifty donated prizes. Assistant Chief Jerry Steiger read a statement at the celebration from

Wes Perkins, former fire chief with 34 years' service, who said it seemed not so long ago that NVFD was celebrating its 50th anniversary in 1987. Perkins urged firefighters to look to the future.

"Our fire department has seen a lot of changes in the past 25 years. I know we will see more changes in the next 25 years as times change," Perkins said. "We must change also. I am proud to see the extensive training we have accomplished and the introduction of the Firefighter I and II programs that give us an understanding of what our jobs are really about.

"I want to thank the volunteers for their commitment of time and also the families of volunteers. As we all know, we miss a lot of birthdays, anniversaries and family functions, but the results are the best volunteer fire department in the State of Alaska," Perkins said.

Hard Corps Auto Body expands workforce

Story and photos by Diana Haecker

A year ago, Hard Corps Auto Body full collision repair shop opened for business under the roof of Jeff Darling's Quality Auto Parts aka CarQuest store in Nome. Darling had the auto parts shop in Nome since 2001 and had toyed with the idea to add a full collision repair shop to the services Quality Auto offers. "I just observed all these new cars that were driving around town all banged up, and I knew there was a need for a collision repair store. It goes hand in hand with what we do at the part store," Darling said.

The idea was turned into action when he met Michael Goldie of Alexandria, Minnesota who had come to Nome to repair and work on Keith Fimon's haul trucks in 2010. Darling hired Goldie and over meetings at the Breaker's Bar, the two came up with the pun-intended name "Hard Corps Auto Body". The "Corps" refers to Jeff Darling's military status as a Marine Corps Veteran

At first, the collision repair was done in the small garage at Quality Auto Parts, while a new shop was being built at Lester Bench. "We moved out to the new shop in November 2011," remembers Darling. Back then, Michael Goldie ran the new full service collision repair shop by himself, with boss Jeff Darling's help.

Since then, the business has been steadily growing. Darling and Goldie were awaiting the arrival of two more specialists who went to school to learn the art of "taking the dent out of accident," as the company's slogan goes.

Nome born and raised Alex Morgan, 23, and his best friend Brett Merboth, 22, also of Nome, recently graduated from the Universal Technical Institute in Sacramento, California with degrees in collision repair and refinish technology.

Jeff Darling planted the idea of attending collision repair school and promised the two a job at Hard Corps Auto Body upon their return. "Brett worked for me when he was in high school, during the summer, and Alex is his best friend, I've known him all along," Darling said. "We were talking one day, and I said it would be a good idea if they wanted to go to school, that we could help them and they could come home and get a job." So they did.

Morgan and Merboth packed their bags and endured a year of schooling in sunny Sacramento, the closest auto collision repair school to Alaska. While they paid for the tuition, Darling helped pay their living expenses and rent. Last month, they graduated and returned to Nome to work for Hard Corps Auto Body.

A huge frame-straightening machine sits inside the well-lit shop, which is neatly organized with every wrench and tool hanging in its proper place. The more than 30,000-dollar machine's purpose is to straighten out twisted car or truck frames, tweaked out of shape by accident. An old truck is strapped to the device. While the frame is being pulled into straight shape, Merboth and Morgan work on taking the dents out of the dinged tailgate and meticulously resurfacing the metal.

Morgan is busy sanding the reconstructed surface as Merboth is mixing primer to begin the paint job.

It almost resembles plastic surgery, giving an old car a new body. Goldie works all the while on a different car, pulling dents out of a door. The crew concentrates on their job, with a sort of focus that gives away their enthusiasm for what they do for a living. While a boom box plays rock'n roll, Goldie's Old English Bulldog named "Harley" smiles from ear to ear as she roams through the shop, supervising her "humans" work and wagging her whole body in approval

Merboth then proudly showed off a project he did as part of his school work – a piece of car hood airbrushed with an Alaskan scene of snowcapped mountains, starry skies and a moose.

Darling held up his end of the deal. The two young collision repair specialists now have a job at Hard Corps Auto Body, working alongside the talented and experienced Mike Goldie to beautify Nome's dinged up trucks and cars. While they express over and over their gratitude for Darling's generosity, the boss has a code to go by and certain expectations. "I expect an honest day's work for an honest day's pay and things should be done right the first time, I believe," Darling said.

Hard Corps Auto Body is open Monday through Fridays from 8 am to 6 pm and on Saturdays from 9 am to 5 pm.

Mina Bachelder

Mina Bachelder went to be with the Lord on October 14 at age 87, surrounded by family.

Mina was born in Edmonton, Alberta and was raised in Vancouver, British Columbia. She married Everett on May 12, 1950, and then moved to Alaska. Following a few years of ministry with Valley Christian Children's Home in Wasilla and later serving the Lord in Cordova, Mina, Everett and her family of three moved to Nome in January 1954, where she made her home for the rest of her life.

Mina's energies were spent raising her eight children, along with many others who became part of the family, entertaining all their friends, baking homemade bread, leading Boy Scout and Girl Scout troops. She was also involved with the local PTA, Mothers' Club, Toast Mistress Club and 4-H Club. She taught Sunday School classes, organized Vacation Bible Schools, attended all her families' sporting events and musical performances, picked them up at the end of canoe trips, and cooked at youth camps took up other ventures. Among the many ministries was the Cocoa House, an after-school program filled with love, Bible stories, games... and hot cocoa. Mrs. B. was always there with a smile and encouraging word for the children who visited the Cocoa House. In the late 70's she began helping with the TLC Bible and Bookstore. Many lives were touched through the ministry of this bookstore that provided encouragement, love and new life.

She was an example of faith in God and a blessing to many people. She always included her favorite Bible verse, Romans 10:9, with her signature. Mina loved to listen to the Nome radio station KICY, enjoyed salmon fishing and berry-picking at camp, and traveling to visit her relatives and friends near and far.

Mina is survived by her children Bethel (Phil) Holbrook of Delta Junction, Dan (Abby) Bachelder of Nome, Joel (Jenny) Bachelder of Wasilla, Rachel (Joel) Holbrook of Delta Junction, Nathan (Paula) Bachelder of St. Louis, MO., Marvel (Hal) Lloyd of Eagle River, Jon (Sandy) Bachelder of Palmer, and Philip (Beth) Bachelder in Niger, Africa. She has 26 grandchildren and 20 great grandchildren and was preceded in death by her newborn son, David, in 1961 and by her husband, Everett, in 1996.

A memorial service was held Oct. 20 at Lazy Mountain Bible Church in Palmer. The Nome memorial service will be held on November 10 at 3:00 PM at the Nome Covenant

The family asks that any donations be made in her memory to KICY in Nome.

Junior and his dad were constant companions and were always looking forward to their next

Junior was always on the move, whether it was playing basketball with the neighborhood kids or building forts on the beach. Gramma Mabel was often behind him making sure he was ok.

He will be deeply missed by his family, friends and classmates. He taught his friends how to fix slipped chains, he took fish off of hooks for them. He was generous with everything that he caught. His memory will live on through all those he

Rev. Karen Sonray Our Saviors Lutheran Čhurch

At the entrance to the Providence Hospital in Anchorage stands a statue of Jesus. His arms are lifted and outstretched. There is something settling in this sight as you face your future. It is an invitation: "Come unto me all who labor and are heavily burdened and I will give you rest." (Matthew 11: 28)

Jesus spoke the same invitation to crowds in his day who knew burdens. They lived under the heavy handed Roman Empire, a system that could not be thrown off by their elders or religious leaders They knew the hard toil of labor and work. People were often seen pulling the weight of heavy loads, large wooden or iron yokes upon their necks.

The yoke was a familiar symbol of subjugation, bondage and oppression. People could not find rest under the domination of the empire whose presence was ever-near.

Today, our burdens may not be as dire. People live longer lives and have due process against the courts. Yet, we are still overcome by systems that cannot easily be throw off....the heavy weight of debts both individually and nationally, overcrowded prisons, people overwhelmed in search of employment. And we personally know those burdened by addictions - drugs easily available and people making money off the misery of others. Many are caught in the yoke of depression or are providing for adult children but not seeing an end to it. Too many people are down on themselves, down on hope or down on their lead-

Jesus sees our loads and invites us to a different yoke, a different burden. How can it be a yoke that is easy? It can because Jesus will put himself with us to carry our loads, like a double oxen. And what does it call for from us? Wholehearted trust.-which is why it's revealed to the babes and the little ones more clearly than the world's wisdom. Trust is not the same as being self – sufficient or wise in our human esti-Jesus invites us to mations. surrender our life to him.

Jesus' yoke of discipleship will not crush us. We surrender our life but we pick up another one. As we learn from Him....study his word, pray, ask help in our attitudes and daily walk, worship on a regular basis, God will renew us and give us

Being yoked to God's Son means also being yoked to his indestructible life. Jesus was once crushed under foot by the empire but he was lifted up on Easter and so his yoke is indeed now easy and light. The rest God wants to give us is new life. This sort of rest cannot happen under the state or corporations. It can only happen from the living God. This life, indeed, gives us strength to face our future with hope, knowing God is for us not against us.

"Come unto me all who labor and are heavily burdened and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn from me.

Arctic Pinkies march for the Cure

By Diana Haecker

Nome was shrouded in icy fog on Saturday, Oct. 27, barely letting enough sunlight through to navigate through Nome's streets. But as soon as a long throng of Nomeites left Old St. Joe's to participate in the sixth Christine Carpenter Perkins Walk for the Cure, the haze parted and let the sun shine on the marchers.

Organized by the Arctic Pinkies, a cancer awareness group in Nome, the annual Walk for the Cure drew participants from every walk of life and age group. It seems that every person had been touched by cancer in one way or the other: as survivor or as family member of those who lost their battle to cancer.

Pastor Julie Yoder Elmore spoke to the gathering on Saturday morning, remembering Chris Carpenter Perkins, who organized the first Walk for the Cure in Nome in 2007, while undergoing chemotherapy. "With all the things that were going on in her life, she found the energy to form the Arctic Pinkies and organize the Walk for the Cure," Elmore said. Christine Perkins passed on in 2010. "But the Arctic Pinkies continue in loving memory of

Chris," Elmore said

Then Leona Mayac a breast cancer survivor spoke and reminded the women in the audience to go to go to regular checkups and have mammograms done annually. The King Island Dancers and Drummers performed to send the walkers on their way, with hope

Sporting sashes, pink ribbons and Walk for the Cure t-shirts, approximately 100 Nomeites started on their walk through town as the fog slowly lifted to reveal a sunny fall day.

Delta Western vs. Bonanza: Fuel barge was diverted to Red Dog Mine

By Sandra L. Medearis

Bonanza Fuel, Inc. has revised a suit it filed against fuel vendor Delta Western in February seeking $1.5 million for expenses incurred following Delta Western's failure, according to Bonanza, to finish delivering its winter retail fuel supply last fall. Bonanza said a replacement delivery by Russian tanker Renda, under U.S. Coast Guard ice breaker escort by alternate company Vitus Marine, had cost the company at least $1,583,000 more than it would have paid DW for a timely delivery during open water.

Delta Western said that inclement weather and winter freeze-up on the Bering Sea made a mid-November delivery by barge impractical. Not so, Bonanza said in a revised complaint filed late last month. Documents show that K-Sea Barge 79 was ready to go to Nome with a shipment for Bonanza when Delta Western diverted it from its path to satisfy a much larger order of 6 million gallons of diesel for Red Dog Mine near time, over a month, during a short arctic shipping season and put Bonanza's order at risk of being blocked by ice-hard seas.

"Bonanza is therefore adding an additional claim for knowing misrepresentation or deceit, as well as a claim for punitive damages for its outrageous misconduct in breaching and repudiating its contract, based on this new evidence produced by Delta Western in discovery," reads Bonanza's court filing seeking to revise its claim.

Bonanza wants a jury trial.

During the summer, Delta Western had delivered over half of Bonanza's order.

Hello out there,

I was sitting here looking at our beautiful view, we are so blessed is so many ways, and I often thank God that I get to see it. If we have so much then why is it so hard to access, or cost us so much?

What happened to the 4.2 billion dollars they said Alaska grossed in 2010? Who said the government could use it? Did they ask the people of Alaska if they could? Did we vote on it? Does that mean we bought the rights of Alaska to become our own sovereign Nation, did we buy Alaska outright?

We could have used the money ourselves to pay for the high cost of everything. Why are we paying such outrageous costs anyway? I would think that by using our money we have earned the right to be considered a part of the 50 states, instead of overseas. If we are considered overseas, then why does it cost less to fly out of state then in?

Yea, one of the many things that winter brings is Eskimo Dancing, basketball and other assorted school activities, long with fishing, hunting, and trapping. That's-if we could afford the gas and oil. Eskimo Dancing is a lot of fun to watch and participate in. Not only does it get people to interact together, but also it helps promote wellness within a community.

One of the ways they could offset the cost of living is to buy seeds for gardens and send them out to all the communities on the condition that there communities all share in the proceeds.

Well, the snow and ice has hit our countryside once again, so be careful. Remember to dress for the cold weather; you could always take things off, and Alaskan weather is unpredictable.

Happy Holidays everyone. Take

As always, Karen Nanouk P.O. Box 282 Unalakleet, AK 99684

Editorial

A monster storm swallowed our Mid-Atlantic coast and left billions of dollars in damage. It seems that our 100-year storms hit at least every three years. It is convenient that Hurricane Sandy delivered enough sand so that the folks who don't believe in global warming can bury their heads.

Of course global warming is real in spite of the political rhetoric that treats it as a voodoo religion that will snatch their souls if they do anything to acknowledge the problem. In Nome we have faced powerful storms that have impacted us with greater force and dumped overwhelming amounts of rain and snow on us. We have seen changes in the types of marine life in our Bering Sea and loss of ice cover in our Arctic Ocean. We are looking at increased shipping and commerce in our seas and the accompanying dangers of massive pollu-

We can combat the effects of global warming, but it requires effort on the national and international level. Instead of saying we've never seen anything like this, we need to get busy with a plan of action. — N.L.M.-

Nome man sentenced to 30 years in jail for killing of girlfriend

By Diana Haecker

Last week, Shawn Oquilluk, 22, was sentenced to 60 years in prison with 30 years suspended and ten years probation, for killing his girlfriend Marie "Tweet" Pushruk in the night of Oct. 7, 2011.

Oquilluk was initially charged with murder in the first degree but entered a guilty plea on July 30, 2012 for the lesser charge of murder in the second degree.

In court documents, the State requested a sentence of 75 years with 45 years suspended and ten years probation.

Although the defendant had no prior convictions, the State prosecutor asked for a strong sentence because of the factors involved in the

The State argued that this case is aggravated by domestic violence and the extinguishment of the life of 21year old Tweet Pushruk. "This case was not a 'bar fight' homicide," wrote State Assistant District Attornev Tom Jamgochian in a sentencing memorandum.

The gruesome nature of the crime was shown in two videos taken in the night of the killing. One video showed Oquilluk and his girlfriend Marie Pushruk after they came home from a night of drinking with friends in Nome bars. Oquilluk shot the video in the early morning hours of

The film shows Pushruk talking affectionately to him and Oquilluk acting insecure and intoxicated.

A video taken 72 minutes later shows Oquilluk playing a guitar with Tweet Pushruk's body laying on the floor. Oquilluk was found next to her, holding her hand, covered in blood. The roommate, who shared a house on East Third Avenue with the couple, found the house barricaded after coming home from a nightshift at work and called the police

Pushruk was dead when police ar-

Oquilluk had lacerations on his arms and a bloody steak knife was found stuck in the floor. He was taken to the hospital for treatment of the wounds and was then taken into custody.

The medical examiner determined that Pushruk died of strangulation.

The state argued that strangulation is a "deliberate, personal and non-instantaneous way to kill some-

Oquilluk maintained that he had no recollection of the night he killed Pushruk, but the State's prosecutor questioned this.

"If the defendant truly was in a blackout, he has no insight into what happened during these 72 minutes and what triggered him to kill someone he professed to love. Because the defendant has zero insight into his homicidal conduct, a significant jail sentence with substantial suspended time is required," the assistant district attorney wrote.

Jamgochian also pointed to the larger picture of rampant domestic violence in Alaska and how a strict sentence could serve as deterrence.

He wrote "Alaska has the unfortunate distinction of the highest rate per capita of men murdering women in the United States.'

The State asked the court to also consider the circumstances and the irreparable harm done to the victim

During the sentencing, Pushruk's family was present and spoke of the loss they suffered.

LOCAL

Oquilluk's family were also present and a former High School principal and a family friend testified on behalf of Oquilluk.

Oquilluk's public defender Angela Greene asked the court for a sentence of 30 years with 10 suspended with 10 years probation.

Greene asked the court to take into consideration that Oquilluk is "the rare defendant who comes before the court without any criminal history whatsoever.'

Witnesses testified that Oquilluk had helped with subsistence activities, providing food and pitching in to keep "life going" in the village from fixing snowmachines to baking or teaching children how to make fry Greene argued "Mr. Oquilluk was a law-abiding, contributing member of the society who evidently felt connected to others in a way that eludes many defendants who come before the court.'

Greene wrote that Oquilluk was quite drunk on that night when the couple celebrated their one-year anniversary as a couple. "Given his level of intoxication, no one will know for sure if he intended to kill her, or just could not modulate his behavior while assaulting her and she died despite his not specifically intending that result," Greene wrote.

The court ruled on 60 years with 30 years suspended and a ten year probation period.

of Land Management, Walter H. Rose of Kawerak, Inc., where he holds the position of energy specialist and Bryant Hammond, also of Kawerak as Director of Department of Community Planning and Development.

In nominating Sparks, Councilman Stan Andersen noted that Sparks had given time to town as volunteer on the planning commission.

"He has been volunteering on the planning commission for the last 10 years. He deserves the next step up," Andersen said.

Hammond also listed volunteer work with Nome Volunteer Ambulance Service and Nome Emergency Shelter Team (NEST). Hughes, formerly mayor of Teller and now Nome resident, listed time as board member of Nome Chamber of Commerce, local branch of Alaska Miners Assn. and six years on BLM Northern Alaska Advisory Council.

Josie Bahnke, city manager, announced in her report that Joy Baker, harbormaster, would not renew her contract for summer 2013.

"We are working on a transition plan with existing staff at Port of Nome and closeout of the 2012 season will continue through the winter months," Bahnke said in a statement. Joy will be departing Nome on Nov. 10 and will be missed by us all at the City of Nome!"

Bahnke reported that traffic in the port this summer had increased by three and four times.

"It's been a pretty wild ride," she said. Last year there were about 40 miners using the port; this year, the number of permits had increased to 128, she said.

In other personnel news, Chris Inderrieden has rejoined the NPD.

The City is recruiting also for an assistant city manager, an engineering technician III, a police officer I and a communications officer.

During her report, Bahnke displayed a check for $35,000 that she accepted on behalf of the police department.

The money will beef up NPD's forensic capability to investigate crimes of sexual assault and child abuse, according to Barbara Cromwell, coordinator for Sex Abuse Response Team.

Cromwell is employed by Norton Sound Health Corp.

The money comes from the Domestic Violence Prevention Initiative through Indian Health Service, according to Cromwell, in an effort to strengthen response. She explained that the SART program has a number of partners who respond to sex crimes—NSHC, Bering Sea Women's Group, Alaska State Troopers, Nome Police Dept., and the district attorney's office headed by D.A. John Earthman. "We are lucky the program is generous enough to strengthen our other SART partners," Cromwell said.

NPD Chief John Papasodora said he would be considering the equipment already available to the department and deciding how to build on it with the new funding to make forensic evidence building tools as useful as possible.

The City of Nome administration is making available at City Hall and the library a Serpentine Hot Springs master plan and Environmental Assessment alternatives newsletter. Public comment is due by Nov. 30.

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration was scheduled to visit with City administration and other agencies on Nov.

NOAA is conducting a study to learn more about Alaska fishing communities such as Nome. In other fishing business, the Council unanimously passed a resolution declaring the municipality did suffer significant effects during calendar year 2011 from fisheries business activities. This was a bit of housekeeping business to assure that Nome would get a share of proceeds from the Shared Fisheries Business Tax Program.

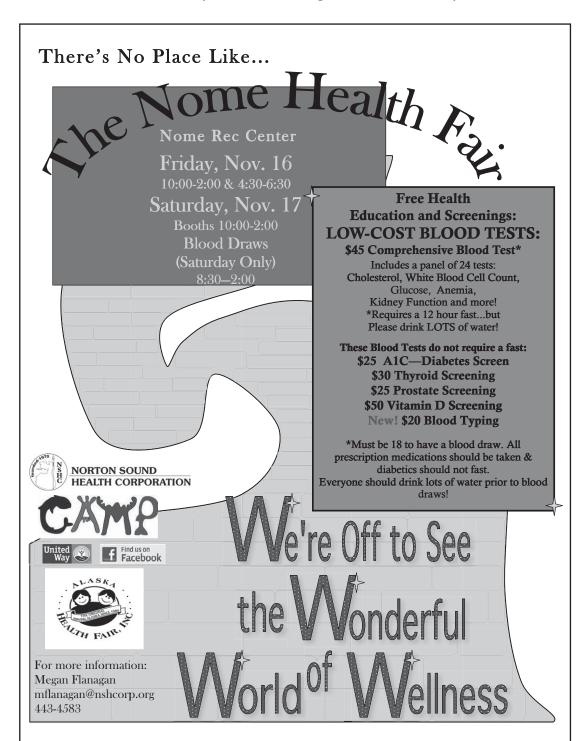

Among matters down to earth, Councilman Jerald Brown wants dogs loose and pooping in Centennial Park to cut it out. He urged City administration to replace signs and renew knowledge in the community that the park is a no-pet area. City Manager Josie Bahnke vowed to check into the issue and to re-establish signs and public awareness.

Finally, City of Nome is holding a sealed bid sale on 16 surplus vehicles. Bidders may inspect the vehicles where they are parked at the harbormaster's office. (Turn left off Seppala Drive at Larry's Auto.) Bids for the "as is" sale must be in by 3 p.m. on Nov. 15. Some vehicles have minimum bid limits. Payment is by certified check within 10 days.

ROCK CREEK MINING COMPLEX - Bering Straits Native Corporation bought Alaska Gold Co., including assets of the Rock Creek mine. Shown is the mill complex, stockpiled ore, and the crushing facility at the mine, located six miles outside of Nome in the Snake River valley.

bond with regulatory agencies to satisfy reclamation requirements associated with the idle Rock Creek gold mine. NovaGold had posted a $20.3 million reclamation bond for reclaiming the Rock Creek mine, of which the State of Alaska released $6.8 million to NG after signing off on the completion of phase 1 of the reclamation plan. The remaining $13.5 million are now in the name of BSNC, which took over all liability for the mine as the new owner. NovaGold said in a statement that under the agreement, NovaGold has been fully indemnified by BSNC with respect to Rock Creek and all other AGC holdings.

BSNC CEO and President Gail Schubert said that negotiations with NovaGold Resources Inc. started 18 months ago when NovaGold wanted to exit Nome to pursue their new "flagship" project at Donlin Creek. Schubert said that BSNC had first rights to purchase the Rock Creek mine, which partially sits on real estate to which BSNC holds subsurface rights. Schubert explained that BSNC has brought in mining expert and former Dept. of Natural Resources commissioner Harry Noah as a consultant. "He suggested early on to consider talking with NovaGold about purchasing the assets at Big Hurrah," Schubert said. Then negotiations expanded to include all of Alaska Gold Co. holdings, including gravel and sand resources as well as land that could be developed inside the city limits. Schubert said that the company has an interest in developing those parcels of land. Novagold had previously committed to donate 50,000 square feet to develop a new museum site and a parcel of land north of 7th Avenue and Steadman Road was set aside as a potential site for the new museum building.

Asked about the relatively low purchasing price for which BSNC scooped up rather significant acreage in and around Nome as well as the complete mining complex at Rock Creek, Schubert said that she sat down with NovaGold's Senior Vice President and Chief Operating Officer Director Gil Leathley for several hours to negotiate the price and laid down what BSNC was willing to pay. The deal came through when the BSNC board of directors approved the purchase in mid-October. "Management and the board believe that purchasing AGC and its properties and assets in the Nome area will provide a good foundation for additional diversification of BSNC's operations, particularly within the Bering Strait region," Schubert said.

Whether or not BSNC will restart mining operations at the Rock Creek mine is yet to be determined. BSNC hired an international mining consulting firm called SRK Consulting, who are tasked to evaluate the mining potential at Big Hurrah and Rock Creek. BSNC Vice President Jerald Brown said that SRK's study is due in February, at which time a decision would be made to either revive mining activities - albeit at a much smaller scale than NovaGold planned to – or to go forward with the second phase of the approved reclamation

Construction of the Rock Creek mine began in 2006 and ended in 2008 when mining briefly started, but NovaGold's board of directors made the decision to shutter the mine. It is estimated that NovaGold spent approximately $280 million in construction, maintenance and care

The only property in Nome that NovaGold held on to is the old gold house and a fenced off area north at Dry Creek that has contamination issues and needs yet to be fully cleaned

NovaGold spokesperson Erin O'Toole said in an email correspondence with the Nome Nugget that there were no employees left at Alaska Gold Co. at the time of the transition and that "NovaGold is pleased with the outcome of the divestiture of Alaska Gold Co. and Rock Creek and wishes BSNC all the best in maximizing the value of its properties in Nome.'

SHELL FLEET - Shell's drill rig, the Noble Discoverer, far left, sits on the horizon outside of Nome on Thursday, Nov. 1. The Noble Discoverer and a host of other support vessels were on their way south after the first summer of Shell's oil exploration drilling campaign in the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas.

Port Commission: New port design would simplify vessel removal

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Port Commission looked at a draft port improvement and expansion design drawn up by their consultant Paul Fuhs and found it pretty good.

Fuhs brought the plan with diagrams and maps to present to the commission at their meeting Nov. 1.

The design moves Port Road to the west to get it out of the middle of the industrial uplands and adds more storage and service facilities including a boat travel lift that could feed a boat storage lot nearby.

If Nome gets money from the legislature and grant sources, the port will grow along with expanded business coming from trade and exploration in the northern seas.

A good start on funding improvements could come with voters' passage of a statewide port bond issue Nov. 6. The bond issue would bring about $10 million to Nome for port improvements and planning for extension of the causeway into deeper water to receive ships of deeper draft.

The commission has retained Fuhs to facilitate Nome's harbor facilities being front and center as a hub for fisheries and research development, staging for oil exploration and drilling in the Chukchi Sea and to maximize tourism arriving on ves-

The port is acquiring about 17 acres of former Alaska Gold Company land north of the tank farm for additional container lay-down operational area

That deal would be inked by the end of the year, according to Joy Baker, harbormaster. This and other expanded storage and container areas would expand the port's capacity as a transshipment center for village cargo.

These projects are construction ready and in progress:

- High mast lighting and electrical line upgrades, finished the past summer for $897,000. Meters are being installed. Lights will have independent controls.
- Snake River Bridge replacement by State Dept. of Transportation, summer 2012 and 2013.
- · Harbor floats and anchor system, remove failed piling and replace with anchor chain.

These projects have attained bid-ready status:

- · East and south dock fender repair and lighting, $1.8 million, bid winter 2012.
- Repair sagging barge ramp, summer 2013.
- Dredge depth authorization from federal government to dredge turning basin to minus 10 feet mean low low-water line.

These projects are coming off the drawing board with 95 percent design completion for which the City is chasing funding:

- · Causeway middle dock construction to install 450 feet of sheet pile connection the City and Westgold docks on the causeway, $12 million.
- Barge high ramp—installing a 35-foot wide sheet pile dock with loading ramp, $3 million.
- Snake River floats for moorage expansion, which would require dredging approximately 80,000 cubic yards of riverbank and installing two 600-foot float sections.

WHAT HAPPENED? - The fuel shortage that launched a delivery using Russian ice-class tanker Renda under Coast Guard escort may have resulted from a fuel supplier diverting the Nome-bound barge to Red Dog Mine.

In August, Delta Western had confirmed it would deliver the remaining 1.3 million gallons of assorted fuel to Bonanza on two barges, one in the first week of September, the last in mid October.

When no barge had appeared by Sept. 8, Bonanza asked Delta Western for an estimated time of arrival.

"... Delta Western represented to Bonanza Fuel that it had a significant weather delay in the past 10 days," and that Delta Western was "going to have to consolidate" the two final fuel deliveries in one late October voyage.

That was untrue, Bonanza said in court documents. Had Bonanza known the weather disguise was untrue, it would not have agreed to the late delivery, according to court records quoting Scot Henderson, fuel manager.

'The real reason Delta Western failed to deliver fuel during the agreed period Sept 1-5, 2011, was that it ordered the barge containing Bonanza's fuel to turn around in the middle of its voyage to Nome in order to deliver fuel for another Delta Western customer, Red Dog Mine, solely for purposes of greater profit to Delta Western," Bonanza's amended complaint said.

According to Bonanza, Delta Western falsely disguised its failure to deliver Bonanza's fuel as a weather delay. The truth was that the barge left Dutch Harbor on August 23 for Nome with fuel, then discharged fuel at Bethel and did a 180degree turnaround back to Dutch Harbor to load up for Red Dog Mine near Kotzebue, according to records produced by Delta Western.

After the harbor iced over in November and no barge had arrived, Delta Western said the company was excused from delivering the remainder of Bonanza's fuel by reason of force majeure, an act of God.

Delta Western filed a countersuit

Feb. 26, seeking protection from Bonanza's claim, pleading force majeure, and saying the company's efforts to assist Bonanza, with an alternate barge and ice breaker arrangement, including an offer to give Bonanza $800,000 had received Bonanza's cold shoulder.

Indeed, an e-mail from Patrick Mulligan, Delta Western barge scheduler, on Nov. 11 to Delta Western management, said that Barge 79 had 400,000 gallons of jet fuel, 300,000 gallons of Ultra Low Sulfur Diesel and 200,000 gallons of regular unleaded gasoline set for delivery the first week of September. He aborted the Nome voyage, Mulligan

"We had the Yuka v.2 coming into Dutch [with 3 million gallons] on the 12th and needed the 79 down there to pick up Red Dog cargo," the email said. "It didn't look good for getting the 79 up to Nome and turned around in a timely manner, so the decision was made to send them to Dutch.

"I remember Scot not being pleased with the quantities we were bringing him in early September, but it looks like the decision to turn around was ultimately on us," Mulli-

Another e-mail sent out on Sept. 6 by K-Sea, owner of the barges, shows Barge 79 headed for Nome with the 900,000 gallons of fuel, and having departed Bethel, running into weather at Cape Newenham at the northern end of Bristol Bay

That's when Delta Western aborted the voyage to Nome and headed back to Dutch Harbor where it started loading the Red Dog cargo from fuel transport Yuka.

Later e-mails show Barge 79 under tow by tug Pacific Freedom leaving Dutch Harbor Sept. 15 with 3 million gallons of diesel and discharging at Red Dog on Sept. 24, then loading another 3 million gallons at Dutch Harbor and delivering at Red Dog on Oct.18.

Then Delta Western started running out of time and came up against the calendar and icy seas.

Mulligan e-mailed Port of Nome Harbormaster Joy Baker on Sept. 22, asking her what was the latest a fuel barge had been able to get into Nome. She replied that in 2006 or '07 a barge had come in on Nov. 11, but that was "really crazy."

On the same day, she told Mulligan that much beyond September was "definitely pushing the weather window." Mulligan agreed, using similar words.

Barge 79 returned to Dutch Harbor on Oct. 24 to load fuel for Bonanza.

As it turned out, Delta Western did not have the 300,000 gallons of unleaded gasoline ordered by Bonanza at Dutch Harbor. Delta had to tow Barge 79 to Adak, about 500 miles west on the Aleutian Islands chain, to load gasoline, adding about 10 days to the late delivery. Fall weather delayed the voyage to Adak, so the Barge 79 did not arrive to load fuel until Nov. 18.

On Nov. 18, when Barge 79 was ready to leave the Adak fuel dock with cargo for Nome, K-Sea's manager, Louis Audette, called a halt to the voyage, saying the late season and impassable ice made the trip too risky for equipment. Additionally, due to the lateness of the season in Western Alaska, K-Sea's insurance trading warranty for the area had expired.

Delta Western denied the allegations set forth in Bonanza's amended complaint and reserved the right to file a Motion to Dismiss or Motion for Summary Judgment seeking to dispose of the allegation of a knowing misrepresentation or deceit.

In a filing Nov. 5, Delta Western reiterated that "with the help of the United States Coast Guard, Delta Western was positioned to do exactly what Vitus [Marine] did in relation to the fuel delivery.

RIBBON-CUTTING CEREMONY & COMMUNITY CELEBRATION: 2 P.M. – 6 P.M.

The Sisters of Providence opened Holy Cross Hospital in Nome in 1902.

This larger Holy Cross Hospital was opened in 1906 and closed in 1917 when the Sisters left Nome for Fairbanks

An arm of the Methodist Church opened Maynard-Columbus Hospital in a private residence in 1917, and moved operations into this larger building in 1922.

New regional hospital to be unveiled at grand opening

In July 2008, Norton Sound Health Corporation board members and officials from the Denali Commission, Rasmuson Foundation and Indian Health Service pressed golden shovels into a brand new gravel pad, breaking ground for a new, state-of-the art regional hospital.

Now, just over four years later, the new Norton Sound Regional Hospital is almost finished and promises to be a healing place with spectacular views. The public is invited to celebrate and tour the new facility during a grand opening ceremony scheduled for 2-6pm on Wednesday, Nov. 14.

At the time of the ground-breaking ceremony, finances were not quite figured out. Still, NSHC had gone ahead and purchased a 38.8-acre site north of the Nome Bypass Road (now Greg Kruschek Ave.), and put down a gravel pad.

The rest fell into place with the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act that infused Indian Health Services funds into building the new facility that is loosely pegged at a total cost of $150 million. A Denali Commission grant paid for the design, done by Kumin Associates, Inc., of Anchorage, in association with Mahlum Architects of Seattle.

Standing in the entrance area of the new hospital, two architects with the architectural firms reflected recently on how it all began.

IN SUMMER 2005, NSHC selected Kumin Associates and Mahlum Architects. Kumin's Jon Stolle said the endeavor started with brainstorming that included all user groups and an intensive two-week tour of the region.

"Team members visited all 15 communities of the region to get a deep understanding of the cultural values and what was important to users not only from Nome, but the other communities," Stolle said.

"From there on we developed a concept plan that was on this same site, but further up the hill." The building was moved to the lower site to reduce costs.

Stolle said the new facility is really two buildings in one, as it houses both a hospital and clinical components.

Architect Duncan Davidson with Mahlum Architects said the building is unusual in that its design is inverted from that of hospitals built in more temperate climates.

"In a conventional building this size you put a lot of infrastructure—big air handling, generators, mechanical equipment, storage facilities and laundry and such—in the basement," Davidson said.

But a basement would melt permafrost. "So in this project we inverted the formula and put all of that on the third floor," Davidson said.

THE HOSPITAL SITS on 40-foot pilings driven through a four-foot-thick gravel pad, a four-inch insulation layer and a geo-tech fabric. The pilings rest on bedrock. Thermo probes next to the pilings conduct warm air up to prevent permafrost thaw.

Inside the new facility, one finds openness and light. The south side of the building is largely triplepaned glass windows framing spectacular views of Norton Sound, the ocean and town.

"The whole length of the building—all 550 feet, the whole southern wall—was set up as public lobbies, gathering spaces. All the medical departments are arranged after that," said Davidson. "So when you come in and wait for your appointment, you can look to the Sound and the city, and the glass front lets in the low sun."

"We used the low sun angle as the organizing principle, to capture that precious sunlight in the winter," Stolle noted.

The 133,873-square-foot facility is three times the size of the current facility.

IT WILL HOUSE the outpatient clinic, with 28 examination rooms, on the first floor. The facility was planned so that patients from outlying communities can get most things done in one visit. Diagnostic labs, dental labs, and a lab for eye glasses are in-house.

Also on the first floor are procedure rooms and an operating room, the emergency room, and the imaging department with X-ray, mammogram and CT scanners.

The second floor will house the CAMP office, WIC, and EMS offices, as well as dental exam rooms, audiology, eye care, a cafeteria, a meditation room, physical therapy offices and the inpatient wing.

The inpatient area has 19 beds in 15 rooms, two delivery rooms and a nursery.

THE THIRD FLOOR houses administrative offices, human resources, billing and records offices.

Each floor boasts two employee lounges: one in the east wing, one in the west wing.

The cafeteria on the second floor is hoped to draw not only patients and hospital workers, but also members of the community. It's part of the effort to make the new facility a warm, welcoming, gathering place.

"We realize that people come here from the villages and they have not seen each other for a period of time," Davidson said.

Art will be prominent in the new building. Art coordinator Peggy Fagerstrom is selecting artwork from the region to adorn the hospital's seemingly endless walls. Three commissioned pieces, by artists Sylvester Ayek, James Adcox and John Coyne, will be featured.

Some 300-400 construction workers have worked on the building, according to Marc Crichton, assistant project manager. The design team consisted of about 100 people and 17 different contractors, as well as specialty consultants for electrical, lighting and even acoustical considerations.

board, past board chairs, hospital personnel and IHS officials used golden shovels to break ground at the hospital site July 30, 2008 (above). Former chair Caleb Dotomain blessed the ground (left). "I declare this a healing ground. May healing flow from here throughout the region and I pray for healing and prosperity for this and following generations to come." (The Nome Nugget file photos)

Currently, about 7,000 pieces of medical equipment plus furniture are being moved into the building. A transition team will next take hospital employees through exercises called "a day in the life."

"We will start to bring groups of people in to begin to model what their functions are going to be so they can begin to understand how they fit in and how the facility changes what they do," Crichton said.

Some non-medical departments will move into the new facility Nov. 27. The building will be open for patient care at the end of January 2013.

Patient focus guides NSHC growth and improvements since 1970

In 1969 the Alaska Federation of Natives sought from the federal Office of Economic Opportunity a demonstration project that would give Alaska Natives greater power over health care decisions, and that would develop village community-based services as an alternative to regional hospital-based service.

Nome was chosen as a project site because of its strong Native leadership.

The project opened an office in the basement of Nome's hospital at the time, Maynard-McDougall Memorial Hospital. Original funding was $143,000. Trips were made to every village to explain the program and ask for election of board members.

Under the leadership of this first board of directors, Norton Sound Health Corporation was issued a certificate of incorporation on Nov. 27, 1970, to serve the health care needs of the Inupiat, St. Lawrence Island Yupik, and Central Yup'ik people of the Bering Strait region.

The board established as its highest priority the "continuation of a comprehensive and quality inpatient facility in Nome."

NSHC didn't operate the hospital in those early years, yet funded a new X-ray machine and nursing salaries.

A community health aide curriculum was developed and was eventually adopted statewide. NSHC trained health aides for both the Bering Strait and NANA regions and the program continues to be a model across Alaska, nationally and internationally. The physician director of the training program also took night/weekend call and assisted at the hospital.

NSHC employed the first eye care technician in the state, who delivered refraction, general screening, dispensing, fitting and adjusting of eyeglasses—despite opposition from some Indian Health Service ophthalmologists. A local private dentist trained health aides to do tooth brushing instruction, monitor oral health and give nutrition advice to families. Cavity rates were reduced.

In 1975, NSHC became the first Native health corporation to become independent of the Alaska Federation of Natives and contract directly with the Indian Health Service for funds through the federal Indian Self-Determination Act of 1975 (PL 93-638).

NSHC has reached many, many milestones over the decades since then

In 1977 NSHC purchased Maynard-McDougall Memorial Hospital in Nome, making the hospital "the first in the nation to be dedicated to ownership and management by a Native American group for the benefit of the entire community," Senator Ted Stevens said at the time.

In 1985 NSHC became one of two tribal contractors involved in an IHS pilot program to test resource allocation through compacting.

In 1988 NSHS opened its 15bed long-term care Quyanna Care Center. In 1997 the tribal doctor program was established. In 1999 health aides became certified, making some of their services billable to Medicaid.

NSHC greatly expanded its wellness efforts in 2000 when it received a substantial diabetes prevention grant. Also in 2000, a wide-area network linking village clinics with Nome was installed.

In 2001, NSHC purchased 38.8 acres of land at the northeast edge of Nome as a site for a new hospital, for which the design process began in 2004. NSHC opened a new patient hostel and prematernal home in 2008 near the site selected for the new hospital. That year the hospital campus went tobacco-free; construction of the new hospital began; and a CT scanner to improve diagnosis and screening was installed.

NSHC continues to keep its focus on patients, clients and communities. When the construction dust settles and NSHC opens a brand new facility—whether it be a village clinic, the patient hostel, or the amazing hospital facility that will open in January 2013—the result is better health care for the people NSHC serves.

ady Nanooks capture Regionals in Barrow

By Stephen Palmatier

The Lady Nanooks continued a winning streak by capturing the Western Conference Regional Tournament championship title in Barrow last weekend.

Coming off two big wins against Barrow at home three weeks ago, the Nanook ladies earned the top seed of the tournament with the victories. However, there were many questions going into the tournament. How would the Nanooks play after having three weeks of no real competition? How would Barrow play after losing two tough matches to Nome? How would Nome handle the pressure as the #1 seed? All of these thoughts circulated through the ladies' minds, but they simply did not let it faze or affect them.

In the first match last Thursday, the Nanooks had no trouble with the fourth seeded Kotzebue Lady Huskies, defeating them in straight sets, 25-9, 25-13, and 25-19. The ladies were strong out of the gates, but played a little worse in the final set, hitting six service errors in the set. Overall, the serving was strong in the match as the ladies were able to compile 15 service aces.

The Nanooks were expected to defeat Kotzebue, and the challenge came in the championship game against the host team Barrow. With the crowd noise and revenge factor playing in Barrow's favor, it was certainly an anticipated match. But the Lady Nanooks came out firing on all cylinders once again as they were able to take the first two sets 25-15

"We were the better team in the first two sets and the girls came out with a desire to win," said Lucas Frost, head coach of the Lady

However, Barrow did not go down easy as they were able to fight back cheered on by their crowd, winning the third and fourth sets 25-12 25-16. With the tournament hanging in the balance, it came down to a fifth and final set where the Lady Nanooks were able to find a way to pull it off, winning it 15-9. "I am so proud of our team", said

Becca Luce, one of the seniors of the Lady Nanooks squad. "We worked hard and pulled through the five sets. The feeling I got when the gamewinning point hit the ground on Barrow's side was exhilarating. We all had our eyes watering filled with joy and excitement," said Luce.

The emotions of the win resonated throughout the team, especially towards the seniors.

"This win means everything. I could not have asked for a better way to end my last time at regions," said senior captain Taylor Pomeranz. "My team played very hard with all their heart and it definitely showed in the game. The team who wanted it more came out on top," said Pomer-

Having won the first two sets but losing the next two, and being down 5-3 in the final set, somehow the ladies were able to overcome the complete momentum shift and still pull the match out. The grit they showed was simply terrific, but it has been why the Lady Nanooks are where they are this year. You can go back to games all season whether it was beating Skyview and Homer, the host in the Homer tournament, beating Bethel in Bethel and beating Barrow at home twice.

But besides their fortitude, the Nome ladies just are a great team of talent. They have got a great striker of the ball in Pomeranz, who compiled 31 kills over the two matches in Regionals. They have great diggers of the ball with Dawn Wehde and Ashley Tobuk. They also have wonderful setters in Dylan Johnson and Kathy Holly, and they have a combination of height and experience for blocks and kills with the likes of junior Ariana Horner and seniors Devynn Johnson and Rebecca Luce.

Even with all of the talent mentioned, a lot of the credit also has to be given to first-year head coach Frost for the squad. His attitude and demeanor throughout his first season has made the girls mentally able to overcome adversity, such as the championship match showed last weekend.

The Nanooks have not completed the entire season yet. Next will the 3A State tournament in Wasilla. Their first match will be Monroe Catholic on Thursday, Nov. 8 at 11:45 a.m. The Nanooks will try to win the state title, and for the four seniors, Pomeranz, Luce and Dylan and Devynn Johnson, it would certainly be a great end to their high school volleyball careers.

Nevertheless, the ladies have certainly made an impact in this season with the region win, and it perhaps will be an impact that resonates to the community for years to come about volleyball.

"We wanted to represent our school to the best ability and bring home a regional banner. And now it's a reality," said Luce.

Nome wrestlers perform shorthanded in Bethel

By Stephen Palmatier

Last weekend, the Nome Nanooks wrestling squad, albeit short-handed, finished in third place for the team competition in Bethel. The Nanooks competed in tournaments for all of last month and the team was battered and bruised. Some wrestlers, including state champion Emery Booshu, stayed back at home last weekend, nursing injuries.

However, the Nanooks who ended up competing did not disappoint. Nome came away with three top 2 finishers, including one champion in Chris Harvey in the 170pound weight class, who beat Drew Nanouk of Kotzebue in a 6-3 decision. Leif Erikson in the 113-pound weight class and Junyor Erikson in the 152-pound weight class also brought home second place finishes.

The story of the tournament, besides Nome being short-handed, was the play of the Bethel Warriors. Coming off wins from the previous weekend's ACS tournament, the Bethel Warriors once again showed that they are a very strong state contender, securing eight titles, twice as much as the second place Kotzebue team with four championship titles. In all, Bethel had 15 top 3 finishes, making them the winning team with a total score of 264.00 followed in second by Kotzebue with 189.00. Nome was third with 115.50 points. In all, there were 20 different schools that participated in the event.

Joe Kowchee, Jr

Joe was born in White Mountain to Joe Sr. and Jennie Kowchee. He attended and graduated form high school at Mt. Edgecumbe in 1959 and went on to Aeronautical Training in California. Joe worked as a helicopter mechanic for various operations in the Anchorage area after obtaining his A & P (airframe and power plant) license. In 1979 he moved to Nome to work for Seward Peninsula Flying Service until it was sold to Olson Air Service in 1983. Joe performed maintenance on numerous aircrafts for individuals in the Nome area doing sheet metal work, inspections and preventative maintenance, he never turned anybody down that needed help working on their airplane. Sheet metal repairs were his specialty as he was known for his meticulous work.

Every chance he got, Joe went to White Mountain where he always enjoyed going down river to duck hunt and fish.

Joe was a very laid back kind of person and was always happy and smiling and you would always hear him say "well all be."

Joe is preceded in death by his parents Joe Sr. and Jennie Kowchee, his brothers Pete, Fred, Mike, Jack and Albert Kowchee.

He is survived by his sisters Bunny Larsen and Joleen Fagundes and many nieces and nephews.

Joe, you will be greatly missed by many. May you rest in Peace.

Saying It Sincerely

By Rev. Julia Yoder Elmore, Community United Methodist Church A Member of the Nome Ministerial Association

Scriptural Reference: Philippians

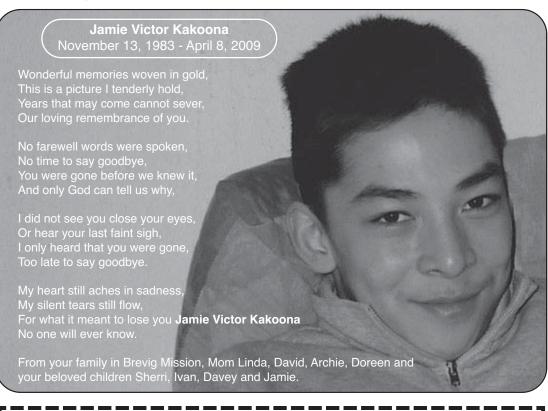

It is November and that means the holidays are just around the corner. In the midst of all the hurry and scurry the holidays bring, it is important that we take time to count our blessings and give thanks to God for all that we have. In the Philippians 4:4-7, we are encouraged to rejoice in the Lord always and not worry about anything, but to give it to God in prayer. Further, we are encouraged to bring our requests to God with an attitude of thanksgiving. As much as we would like to think so, we are not ultimately in charge of everything. God is working through the positive and negative things that happen in our lives. Through the hardships and disappointments, there is often a lesson to learn or call to action to help transform our community and world for the better. Through what may seem like the end of the world for us, God may be calling us to help others.

Recently, I saw a news piece on a woman who had started running as a way to keep herself fit and to deal with her father's alcohol and gambling addiction that plagued her family. In the wee hours of the morning, her route would take her by a homeless shelter. As she passed the shelter, the residents would cheer her on. Then she thought about how it was unfair that she had the resources to run, but they did not. So she got sponsors, raised funds and started an organization called "Back on my Feet," which is active in many major cities. Through this program, homeless men and women are outfitted with the proper gear and run together each morning. Through their participation they receive incentives, gaining them access to housing, education, job training and employment opportunities.

I have recently taken up regular exercise, including running, as a way to improve my health. I never considered my running journey would ever go beyond me. Now, I am trying to discern ways that my running could benefit others. As I exercise, I know that the Lord is near, using others to encourage me. I sense that the Lord is near as I discern how I can help transform the world through something that has been a challenge in my life. Is God calling me to gather other runners together to raise funds for a cause in our community and region? Is God calling me to inspire younger women to start their journeys to better health earlier in their lives? I do not yet know, but am certain that it will become clearer with prayer and reflection.

How is the Lord near in your life through current challenging times? How might God be calling you to help others through the difficult times? With thanksgiving, make your requests known to God.

The fate of the active couch potato

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Most people know that exercise is good for them. Scientists now find that excess inactivity, even if people get a little exercise regularly, may increase the risk for serious disease.

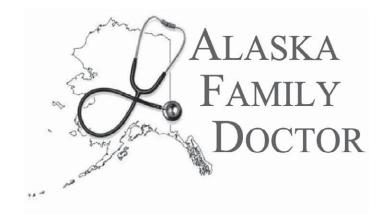

"Sitting-time" has a profound effect on whether or not a person will develop diseases like diabetes mellitus, cardiovascular disease, impaired glucose tolerance (pre-diabetes), obesity, and certain cancers. Sitting time may also affect mortality rates (risk of death).

A study out of Canada published in May of 2009 in the journal Medicine & Science in Sports & Exercise, followed over 17,000 people ages 18-90 over a 12-year period and compared their mortality rates based on how much sitting-time they averaged daily.

The researchers found what they call a dose-response. The more time a person spends sitting throughout the day, the higher his or her risk of death. Those who spend half their waking-day seated are 11 percent death. The human body is made to more likely to die from any cause compared with people who sit only one-quarter of the time, and those move

There is good evidence that exercise leads to substantial health bene-who spend almost all their time in behaviors that require prolonged sitting are 54 percent more likely to die of any cause.

The bottom line (no pun intended): the more you sit during waking hours, the higher your risk of fits. This is why the American Heart Association recommends at least 150 minutes of moderate-to-vigorous physical activity every week.

But this level of activity may not overcome the harmful effects of sedentary habits.

Scientists are now turning their eye toward the physiology of sitting in an attempt to understand why sedentary people, even those who get regular exercise, develop certain health problems.

The best research we have so far comes from rats. When allowed to exercise, rats develop elevated levels of a special enzyme called Lipoprotein Lipase. This enzyme breaks down harmful fats in the blood stream and allows them to be safely absorbed into muscles and other tissues of the body. Sedentary rats have lower levels of LPL. Therefore the harmful substances build up in their blood stream leading to metabolic dysfunction, atherosclerosis, and cardiovascular disease. Interestingly, if rats are allowed to engage in leisurely activity (the equivalent of walking to work) they produce nearly the same amount of LPL in the bloodstream as rats engaged in vigorous exercise. This means that muscle activity of any kind, not just strenuous exercise, plays a role in keeping us healthy.

In the Middle Ages, scholars identified inactivity as one of man's seven deadly sins. "Sloth," as they called it, was seen as one of the biggest threats to spiritual, mental, and physical health. Modern scholars not only agree; in addition, they are finding biochemical causes of illness in people who are sedentary. Perhaps this research will lead to the development of new medications for people who are forced into a sedentary life by a disabling illness or in-

But for those who have the ability to move, a less expensive prescription is already available: simply find ways to move throughout the day. Walk to work, stand at work, and walk to the store, post office, or bank. Take the stairs, chop wood, or shovel snow.

Experts tell us that physical activity throughout the day, not just strenuous exercise, is important for overall health, and the more we do to reduce sedentary time, and especially sitting-time, the more likely we are to avoid serious disease.

CHIEF'S NOTES

By Nome Police Chief John Papasodora

It's been a busy week for all of us school, work, Halloween and, of course, weekend recreation. The media release shows that many times people make poor choices, with the choices going from poor to abysmal when alcohol is added to the mix. There have been several significant physical fights this week in which people have suffered injuries. All of them involved alcohol to some extent. Though I've said it before, be careful around alcohol and with the people that you associate with. Many people exhibit a Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde personality when drinking. So, exercise good judgment when you're out and about. This might help you or help you help someone else who is in need.

One of the great things about

Nome is that people want to get involved. We at the police department work very hard to give the people of Nome direct access to the police in a way where you know we are here to serve your needs. In my travels about town to the Post Office, grocery store or at the ice rink, I am approached almost daily by someone who has a community issue they want to talk about. Last Sunday I was at the grocery store when a citizen approached me to tell me about recent drug activity in the area. I was in my Carhartt's and selecting produce, but I felt honored that a member of the community would feel comfortable approaching me about a matter of such great importance. That is the way I want the community to feel about all of our police officers and departmental employees. We are here to try and provide a safe and secure community for all of us to live in.

The last entry into the media releases announces that we do have a 'CRIME LINE'. The Crime Line is a way for members of the community to anonymously report suspicious activity. Most of the calls we receive on the Crime Line report drug activity and it is my duty to let everyone know that Nome does have a drug problem. Every little bit of information that you can provide about drug activity is valuable. We want to put the people who sell drugs out of business and can do it – but only with your help. Please call the Crime Line with any information you may have. The number is 443-8509. You can remain anonymous and still help your community.

On a final note, I would like to thank all of the members of the community who have offered to donate to replace the tools that were lost at the ice rink. Though all of us appreciate the offers, none of us who lost tools feel that the community should have to pay to replace them.

would much rather just get them back. So if you have some information about who took them - you got it – call the Crime Line!

Nome is a great community to live in. By working together and maintaining open communication, as a community we can make a difference. If you have a question or concern that you need to talk about, help is only a phone call away.

City Council affirms seating of Pomeranz and Andersen

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council canvassed and affirmed the Nov. 6 municipal runoff election results at a special meeting Nov. 8.

The Council will have the same faces around the table, with the exception that Tom Sparks has been appointed to serve out the term of former Councilwoman Mary Knodel until Oct. 2014.

Incumbents Stan Andersen and Randy Pomeranz survived challenges in runoffs against challengers Jim West, Jr. and Randy Oles.

Incumbents Jerald Brown, Louie Green Sr. and Josie Stiles complete the Council circle.

The runoff election resulted from Andersen and Pomeranz winning the October election but neither achieving the required 50 percent plus one Final counts in the runoff showed Andersen winning Seat D with 541-440, a plus of 101 votes, and Pomeranz overcoming Oles' challenge for Seat C by 47 votes, 510-463. Both new terms end in October 2015.

The seats held by Jerald Brown and Josie Stiles expire in 2013. Louie Green Sr.'s seat expires at the same time as Sparks' in October 2014.

Less than half of Nome's registered voters voted for the municipal candidates, with turnout heavier for Precinct 1 (44.31 percent) than in Precinct 2 (39.71 percent).

Sparks raised his right hand and took the oath of office Nov. 8.

"I will, to the best of my ability, honestly and faithfully discharge the duties of my office of city councilman without fear, favor or partiality and therein to do every justice to all persons and to the City, so help me God," Sparks vowed, reading the oath sworn to by Nome's public rep-

The Council approved Mayor Denise Michels' appointment of Sparks to Knodel's seat on Nov. 5, the day before the election.

At the time of his appointment, Sparks chaired the Nome Planning Commission where he has volunteered his time for a decade; however, Sparks resigned his planning panel seat a few days later, saying he did not feel it was fair to the public for him to serve on the two panels.

That the Nome Common Council must ratify actions forwarded from the Nome Planning Commission presents a potential conflict of interest and erosion of checks and balances if Sparks were to serve at both

Planning panel upholds codes on new construction projects

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Planning Commission turned down variances on two projects Nov. 9, sending them back or up—back to the drawing board for modification or up to the Nome Common Council for an override of the planning panel veto.

Nome Covenant Church applied for four or five variances on all sides of several building options for their church-teen center complex going up at the current church site at the corner of Bering and Front streets. The church received a grant that will fund the complex involving the church property, the Lewis house eastward and the building formerly occupied by Arctic Trading Post and previously owned by Howard and Mary

The variances generally involved relaxing code setbacks from lot lines and streets to accommodate full use of the 7,000 foot lot. City law requires a building to stand five feet back from lot lines and 10 feet back from street right-of-ways.

One variance sought on the church property would allow the Bering and Front Streets corner of the building to be less than 10 feet from the streets.

Commissioners thought this variance from code would block view for traffic and pedestrians on an already congested corner that involves a confluence of Lomen, Bering, Front and River streets

As the variances involve new construction, several commissioners balked at granting variances that could be eliminated if the project were designed to fit the lot.

"They have a 7,000-foot lot, a normal-sized lot. I don't know why we are talking about it," Commissioner Randy Romenesko said.

We want to get the maximum use of the lot, to have only one story," Nathan Nagaruk, speaking for the Covenant Church, said. "That will make it more accessible.

Nagaruk noted that a five-foot setback from Front Street instead of the required 10-foot setback would make the church building consistent with the placement of other buildings on Front Street.

Greg Timbers came forward with a request for a variance on lot size for a project at Fifth Avenue and H

Street. The Timbers family has owned a large lot west of Sitnasuak Native Corp.'s 26-plex apartment building since the 1970s.

This summer, workers graded and filled the lot after clearing vehicles in preparation for construction.

Timbers gave a detailed presentation on the family's need to subdivide three 7,000-foot lots into six smaller lots of 3,500 square feet to build a series of fourplex apartment buildings

A work plan calls for building two fourplexes for the next three summers. The smaller lot size would violate a City law adopted in 2008 requiring minimum lot size of at least 5,000 square feet.

The plans observed all other codes for setbacks, firefighter access, space between buildings and the like, except for lot size. Timbers needed approval for the design, with each building sitting on its own lot as presented to secure financing from Alaska Housing Finance Corp., he

Coast Guard, ADEC investigate oiled birds and seals

By Diana Haecker

Reports of oiled wildlife at St. Lawrence Island triggered a response from the U.S. Coast Guard, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game and the Alaska Dep. of Environmental Conservation to investigate the source and extent of it.

As of press time on Monday, a source of the oil has not been found.

Investigators are working with the communities and mayors of Gambell and Savoonga as they comb the beaches at St. Lawrence Island for more evidence of oiled wildlife or oiled objects.

Subsistence hunters observed three common murres with oil on their bellies near Gambell on Sunday. Nov. 4. One bird was harvested for testing.

On Tuesday, Nov. 6, an oiled crested auklet was found near Gam-

On Oct. 26, an oiled spotted seal was harvested for subsistence, also near Gambell.

A month earlier, on Labor Day, a report came from Shishmaref that a subsistence hunter had taken a spotted seal with an oily belly. The Shishmaref seal was sent to

Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game for analysis and oil taken from the seal's belly was analyzed to find out if it matches the samples from the birds and seal found near Gambell.

US Coast Guard spokesman David Mosley said that oil samples have been collected from the seals and the birds and are being tested to reveal a potential source.

On Thursday, the U.S. Coast Guard sent a Coast Guard Hercules airplane from Kodiak to St. Lawrence Island with a pollution investigator aboard to conduct an aerial survey, but no oil sheen was observed on the ocean around the island. According to Mosley, the plane then flew to Shishmaref and conducted another aerial survey along the coastline from Shishmaref to Wales, but also without any observations of oil slicks or sheen.

The Coast Guard set up a socalled unified command which includes the Alaska Department of Fish & Game, the Department of the Interior, the University of Alaska Marine Advisory Program, the National Oceanic Atmospheric Association and local tribal leadership

It's All Right

Hey! The little guys won. The screaming talking heads, the truth-isso-limiting robo calls and TV ads, the billions of bucks paid out by the axe-to-grind and mysteriously motivated political action groups have been resoundly put into their place by the American voters. Contrary to what some ultra conservatives believe, the nation is not going to hell, it is heading on the road to the fulfillment of the American dreams.

The people have spoken and they really want to move forward. They aren't fooled by the anti-global warming hoopla. They aren't fooled by the so-called Christian right, the gynecological stupidity, and the whacko birthers. The Tea Party has been dumped into the harbor. It will be so nice to get rid of the partisan acrimony.

Another bright star on the Alaskan horizon is the people of western Alaska who voted solidly for Obama. It shows that bush Alaska has a brain, which cannot be said for the Valley and Anchorage folks who voted for what's his name. Our Democratic senator needs to pay attention to Rural Alaska. We are a force to be reckoned with and we aren't easily fooled. -N.L.M.-

This is a Ouyana, thank you to all you searchers, community members of Unalakleet and individuals from near and far who showed loved, respect I the passing of our son, grandson David Vernon Slwooko on his

"And God Knows Best." Our stay on earth is so short compared to eternity. Where will you spend eternity? Eat, drink and be merry for tomorrow you may die. My mother knows first hand about losing loved ones. She has handled death with an understanding that we will be reunited someday. Our elders are slowing down quite a bit physically, some are strong spiritually, we have mothers, grandmothers whom pray on a daily basis for their children.

Once again, thank-you to you all whom visited, brought sustenance, sent cards, make phone calls ad just came by to visit and sing hymns and encouraged my mother in ways that will not be forgotten.

Perhaps some of you may think bad mistake in traveling in the situation they were in, we're human and make many mistakes, but you know what God loves us in our mistakes, imperfections and he never stops pursuing us.

To our redeemed elders God knows your frailties and he will never leave you or forsake you.

Congratulations to Maggie Olson on her blessing of her granddaughter. I will always vote for Donny. Howard Ira Slwooko P.O. Box 261 Unalakleet, AK 99684 P.S. David you will never be forgotten. My thoughts to the Kimoktoaks, too.

To the editor,

My grandson has been practicing Taekwondo with Master Dan Scholten, for over seven years now.

The art and Master Dan's teachings have been a big part of his life. TKD discipline and training has helped Michael strive to be of good character, full of faith in his spirituality, full of curiosity, and generally just a good kid in school and at

I have also been interested in the martial arts since I was young, but never really pursued it.

After quitting tobacco and other not so beneficial habits a little over two years ago, I felt like I could commit to training in TKD as I was starting to feel healthier.

Master Dan allowed me to train with his class as a newbie to TKD at 50 years old after I obtained and passed a background check. Starting a martial art like this at my age was a concern of mine and I found out that Master Dan has experience in training with folks over 40.

I've been training now for two years. My grandson and I will be testing for our first level of Black Belt together which is quite exciting for me, because I never thought I would change, for the better overall, I believe, as much as I have so far.

Michael and I are in the art for many reasons, it is good training for the body and mind, it is good exercise, the stretching at the start of class is relaxing, we feel part of a team or group that is dedicated to clean, healthy, and active living.

TKD teaches calmness, control, order, self-discipline, joy in activity, and fellowship. The added benefit is, maybe over time, if training is consistent and productive, you may be able to develop the ability to effectively defend yourself or other innocents in the rare event of an emergency or out-of-control situa-

There are four instructors now in our school and a health training coach, so our experience is growing and we're ready for new students. I would like to encourage people of all ages to check it out and see what it can do for you.

I would also like to thank Master Dan Scholten and his family for being there like family for Michael and myself as we advance in TKD and for being there for many people around Norton Sound for many vears.

Thank you. Tim Stettinger Nome, Alaska 99762

Students learn art of Eskimo dancing

By Elizabeth Korenek-Johnson

On Friday, Nov. 9, Nome Elementary School third grade students wowed family and community members with a performance of King Island traditional dancing. students had worked all week to learn the Welcome Dance, the Green Picking Dance for girls, and the Walrus Dance for boys.

More than 65 family and community members attended the performance, as well as fellow students and

The third grade reading curriculum includes "Dancing Rainbows" by Evelyn Clarke Mott. Students read of the Tewa Pueblo Indians of San Juan, New Mexico, and the tradition of dancing in their culture. This was easily tied to the local Inupiaq culture of dance as a form of story sharing.

Third grade teacher, Elizabeth Korenek-Johnson worked with King Island Elder Francis Alvanna to arrange for drummers and dancers to work with third grade students in order to pass on the tradition.

Kawerak Community Wellness program coordinator Dawn Nassuk assisted to support the Elder involvement.

Monday through Thursday, King Island dancers and drummers Vince Pikonganna, Francis Alvanna, Frances Muktoyuk and Toni Smith worked with the approximately 45 third grade students on three dances. All students performed "The Welcome Dance", while the girls learned and performed the "Green Picking Dance", and the boys did the popular "Walrus Dance" (concluding with an imitation walrus bark).

The event culminated with a Welcome Dance to include all those present, at which time several parents joined their children on stage to dance together.

Also helping out to teach dances were fourth grade student dance-instructors who helped each day, with great leadership, pride and Native spirit: Payton Curtis, Samantha Gologergen, Devin Kakaruk, Martin Komonaseak and Komonaseak. This was a true community-wide effort and rich educational experience.

Non-stop training makes excellent firefighters

Part III in a series By Sandra L. Medearis

Who hasn't seen a firefighter? They ride the big red truck down the main drag in hometown parades. They appear on TV at tragic fires, face sooty, gripping a hose or going up a ladder to rescue a stranded kitten. They are brave; they are our friends. They risk their lives to protect life and property.

What most people don't get to see is the dedicated hours firefighters put in to prepare for service that is dramatic to bystanders, but just in the line of duty for volunteers who have already made the commitment. Behind the more dramatic scenes, firefighters train, train, train, and then train some more, to perform effectively while keeping themselves and their other firefighters safe. The rest of the time, they are on call.

"It's pretty much 24-7," NVFD Captain Randy Oles said.

Oles daughter, firefighter Engineer Mackenzie Oles, can attest to that.

"One time he got called out during Thanksgiving dinner," she remembered.

Firefighters asked about what makes a good fireman said training, commitment and guts, within safe procedures and skills.

Then it is a matter of training ac-

Then it is a matter of training, according to Firefighter I Chugie Farley, whose interest in helping with Search and Rescue drew him to the department..

"On-the-job training makes a good firefighter," he said. "You learn as you go. Firefighter I training, for example, is an 80-hour course."

"Training makes the fire fighter. There is no such thing as a person who starts out a good firefighter. They pick it up as they go, said Randy Oles. "They come in with no experience, except they are willing to commit to protecting their community."

This training makes Nome's firefighters ready to respond to a variety of fire and nonfire emergencies. They never know what the call will be.

Duty called

Randy Oles did not hesitate, he said, when Fire Chief Doug Doyle told him to get out to Evergreen Helicopters almost 20 years ago to help rescue seven missionaries. Their airplane, a Piper Navaho, made an emergency landing on water and sank, putting the group into the stormy seas off Nome. The group was returning from a mission trip to Lavrentiya across the Bering Strait in the Russian Far East.

They had called Flight Service Station saying they were going down, they were running out of fuel," Oles said. The Flight Service Station declared an emergency. It was about suppertime when Eric Penttila, Evergreen Helicopter station manager, called Doyle on Friday, Aug. 13, 1993 and asked him to send his strongest firefighter. Oles left without hesitation.

"Eric came by, I grabbed a Mustang suit and jumped in the car. We went out there expecting to find some debris, fuel sheen and maybe a couple of bodies, chances of finding something in the ocean like that are pretty slim," Oles said last week, retelling the story. "There were seven people below us, alive and clinging to empty fuel tanks."

Oles opened the door of the helicopter and stepped out on the skid tube. I ended up sitting down on it and hanging onto the steps

The impromptu rescue crew had no water rescue equipment in those days, Oles said.

"The mechanic was lying on the floor reaching out trying to my jacket once in a while.. All there was in there was a piece of rope." A Baker Aviation airplane with Vic Olson in the pilot's seat and a Bering Air flight piloted by Terry Day hovered over the scene in a holding pattern. Terry Day had spotted the airplane in the water and reported it to Flight Service Station.

"We would dip down between the swells. I would try to raise someone up before the next swell came," he said. Penttila was trying to keep the tail rotor from catching the water. "I was wet up to my belly in swells of three to four feet.'

An ERA helicopter working for a Canadian company slinging a magnetometer joined the rescue and helped get the survivors over to the top of Sledge Island.

"We split up the seven between the two helicopters and took them to Nome," Oles said.

The seven received treatment for hypothermia after being in the 36-degree water, according to accounts, and were released.

Eric Penttila, Jerry Austin (Evergreen mechanic), Oles and Walter Greaves, ERA helicopter pilot received the American Eurocopter Golden Hour Award, an annual award for those who advance the use of helicopters in medical transport, as well as about a dozen other national and state awards, including the Alaska Legislature.

Nome Volunteer Fire Dept members train almost every Wednesday night, in class, in the field, on the fire trucks. They must attend a required number of meetings.

A skills list serves the rank of Firefighter I. To achieve the rank, a firefighter must pass a written test and a set of mandatory skills demonstrations as well as a number of random pop quiz skills demonstrations.

Running and jumping on the fire truck involves more than sliding down the fire pole, petting the Dalmatian fire dog before hopping the truck and rolling down the street with siren blaring.

The firefighters must demonstrate they mount and dismount the vehicle using seat belts and correctly using personal protective equipment. The HARNESS TRAINING-NVFD personnel train on Wednesday evenings and other times to prepare themselves for fires and other emergency responses. (I to r) Firefighter Quinton Johnson, Firefighter II John Walters, observing, Capt. Doug Johnson, Capt. Jim West Jr.

Here is a partial list of other required skills for which a firefighter has to demonstrate competence. donning protective clothing and preparing it for reuse; rope, knots and tool hoisting; locating information in departmental documents and code materials; taking and recording a report of an emergency and initiating a response; radio operations; donning and doffing correctly within one minute a self-contained breathing apparatus knowing controlled breathing and emergency procedures if the SCBA fails or runs out of air (knowing 22 steps); ability to recognize low-air warnings from the SCBA and exit through a restricted passage; setting up traffic control and other staging of an emergency scene; exterior fire attack; interior search and rescue; interior fire attack on grade

And then there are plenty more skills required, as extending and replacing hose sections; ventilation vertically and horizontally as a team with specific and procedures; conserving property and contents from further damage; connecting a pumper apparatus to a water supply as a team member so that connections are tight and flow unobstructed; fire extinguishers A, B and C; and finding controls and turning off building utilities. There are still more skills to achieve for Firefighter I rank. There are book tests and practical evaluations of many steps for still other ranks and titles achieved by NVFD firefighters: Firefighter II, Engineer, Lieutenant; Captain, Fire Chief and Battalion Chief.

Additionally, about a dozen of Nome's firefighters have extended their volunteerism into medical emergency response. About a dozen of the 42 firefighters have attained ranks of Emergency Medical Technician I or II and Emergency Trauma Technician.

Nome Volunteer Fire Dept achieved its charter on Oct. 11, 1937. The department held a 75th anniversary ceremony along with a dinner and dance evening on October 20.

At that bash, retired Fire Chief Doug Doyle sent the department a congratulatory message.

He was proud of his service as chief and proud of the NVFD, he

"We can hold our own with any fire department in the country, professional or volunteer," said Doyle.

These firefighters began the Nome Volunteer Fire Dept. tradition: NVFD charter members in 1937 were Norvin W. Lewis, Kurt Springer, Jim Davidson, Garner W. Martin, E. J. Bundy, Curtis Jacobs, J. B. Hurley, Alton J. Arrowood, Alvin A. Polet, Binks Sieffert, H. G. Miller, Ray Decker, Russell G. Maynard, Aben Shallit, and H. F. Harper.

These firefighters carried the tradition forward in 2012:

The NVFD roster lists the following volunteers with their ranks:

NSEDC board seeks cost estimates for salmon hatcheries feasibility study

By Laurie McNicholas

The Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. board of directors decided to investigate the feasibility of building salmon hatcheries in the region at a quarterly meeting held Nov. 7-8 in Unalakleet. The board directed staff to present cost estimates for a feasibility study for hatcheries at a budget meeting scheduled for December.

Board Chairman Dan Harrelson said a number of Norton Sound salmon runs need to be restored and stabilized. If NSEDC builds a hatchery, the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game and Sitnasuak Native Corp. may participate, he added. He said the old reindeer plant in Nome is a possible location for a hatchery. Unalakleet is trying to rebuild king salmon runs and other communities are concerned about diminished chum salmon runs, he noted.

Charlie Lean, NSEDC's director of fisheries research and development, said a hatchery for pink and chum salmon could be located anywhere in the region, but coho (silver) salmon and kings must be held for a year in a raceway or tank and require warmer water. Nome's power plant produces a huge quantity of waste heat to run a facility for keeping water warm in winter months, he added. He said a minimum of 300 gallons of water per minute would be required.

Harrelson noted that Pilgrim Hot Springs has thermal energy, and he asked whether a hatchery could be placed there. Lean said electricity, heat and water are needed and if they could be accessed cheaply at Pilgrim Hot Springs, the site might work.

Harrelson asked whether hatchery funds are available from sources other than NSEDC. Lean said the company may be able to obtain a grant for state funds if it shows ability and administrative detail, but a commitment of 10 to 20 years is required to get the money and a hatchery permit.

Lean said salmon rehabilitation funds appropriated a couple of years ago by Sen. Donny Olson and other legislators recently were awarded to four Norton Sound projects. Lean said NSEDC was granted $100,000 year for 10 years for a chum salmon project in the Nome subdistrict, and the company won a contract for $190,000 a year for 10 years for a Chinook (king) salmon project on the South River near Unalakleet. He said the Native Village of White Mountain was awarded $150,000 a year for 10 years for a pink salmon project on the Niukluk River and Fish River, and Sitnasuak was granted $50,000 a year for two years for a salmon project at Hobson Creek near Nome. Sitnasuak has not decided whether to accept the grant, Lean added.

Miserable salmon harvest

Harrelson said some Norton Sound fishermen are seeking relief from NSEDC's loan payment requirements due to a bad salmon fishing season this year. Harvest efforts were hampered by late salmon runs at the beginning of the season and severe weather conditions in August. The company paid $765,000 to 132 permit holders for salmon (chum, pinks and coho) purchased this year compared to payments totaling $1.3 million to 126 salmon fishermen in 2011, Harrelson noted.

William (Middy) Johnson of Unalakleet suggested the company give back loan payments deducted from payments to fishermen for their catches rather than forgive their loans. Janis Ivanoff, NSEDC's president and CEO, said fishermen could be asked whether they want their loan payments returned. Harrelson said some fishermen who have a job may want to keep their loan payments applied.

Oscar Takak of Elim said fishermen in Elim and Golovin started fishing late in the season, and one fishermen told him he made much less this year than last year.

"Across the board it was pretty miserable, here too," Johnson said. "Some made one-third of the month they made last year."

Eugene Asicksik of Shaktoolik said three fishermen asked about a bonus for fishermen this year.

Winter fishery planned

The board allocated $40,000 to Northern Norton Sound Seafood Products in Nome to support winter commercial crabbing and bait fishing for tomcod and trout. NNSSP plans to buy crab, tomcod and trout caught through the ice after Nov. 15 as soon as there is enough ice for safe fishing.

The fisheries are open to residents of NSEDC's member communities. Those who want to participate need to obtain a permit for their fishery and must contact NNSSP in Nome before participating in either fishery. NNSSP Operations Manager Rich Ferry or Assistant Manager Josh Osborne can be reached at (855) 443-2304 (toll-free) or 443-2304 in Nome.

Details about permit applications and other information about each fishery are available at www.nsedc.com under "News: Residents encouraged to take part in winter crab and bait fisheries."

Ferry told the board NNSSP may not be able to offer the high dock price of $5.50 per pound paid for Norton Sound red king crab in the commercial fishery last summer because warehouses in Japan are full of crab illegally caught in Russian waters. He said the dock price for Bristol Bay red king crab currently is 28 percent lower than it was a year ago.

Ferry said NNSSP paid Norton Sound fishermen nearly $2.5 million for the 2012 summer commercial red king crab harvest.

Financial gains reported

NSEDC reports a net asset gain of $14 million through Sept. 30. Total net assets stood at $166.5 million on Sept. 30, compared to $152.9 million on Dec. 31, 2011. Liabilities totaled $29.6 million on Sept. 30 compared to $33.3 million at the end of last year. Company Controller Rick Walicki said the third quarter financial report figures are preliminary.

Walicki reported total revenues of $38.3 million through Sept. 30, up $12.4 million from revenues of $25.5 million on Sept. 30, 2011. He said the increase is largely due to a securities investment gain of $7 million this year, compared to a loss of $4.2 million a year ago. The value of NSEDC's investment portfolio totaled $69.7 million at the end of last year, according to the company's 2011 annual report.

Included in revenues received through Sept. 30 are harvest royalties of $19.2 million, up $2.5 million from $16.7 million on Sept. 30, 2011. Walicki attributed the gain to this year's faster pollock harvest and an increase in the total allowable catch of opilio crab.

Quota Manager Joel Cladouhos said Chinook (king) salmon bycatch in the pollock fishery totaled 11,350 fish in 2012 compared to 25,000 kings in 2011, and chum salmon bycatch dropped to 22,000 fish this year from 191,000 chums last year. Pollock B season dock prices are 5 to 10 percent higher this year than last year, he added.

NSEDC's long-term assets have not changed much this year, Walicki said. He reported a total of $19.6 million in property, plant and equipment through Sept. 30, compared to $17.2 million on Sept. 30, 2011. "The difference is the money paid out to acquire the Paul C. Johnson, Breakaway and Daniel D. Takak," he said. They are tender vessels.

Walicki said expenses have increased significantly this year due in part to a mid-year Community Benefit Share distribution of $200,000 to each of NSEDC's 15 member villages, a total of $3 million, and an energy subsidy for each household in the region totaling $1.3 million. Fishing and fish processing expenses increased by $700,000 and tender vessel expenses grew by $260,000 this year compared to 2011, he reported.

Walicki said through Sept. 30 the company used a total of about $7 million in cash assets to buy property, plant and equipment items and securities. The company began the year with about $10 million in cash assets, of which $2.9 million was left on Sept. 30.

The NSEDC board adopted a finance committee recommendation that anytime funds are deposited into the investment account, 25 percent of the amount will be deposited into the company's education fund, and that monies will never be withdrawn from the education fund.

Funds for communities balked at approving the variance to reduce the size of the lots, saying that the request did not meet the needs test of a variance. Others thought the plan OK as all other codes would be met except lot size, and that new housing would be good.

He could build the project without the variance if he were using cash, Timbers countered, stressing that the variance was to satisfy financing.

"We want to maximize the value of the land. That's essential to our business plan," he said.

"What does it [smaller lot size variance] matter if I could do it anyway?" Timbers asked.

"It is very expensive to build anything. If not, we wouldn't have a shortage of housing, he said. "We'd like to do the project, but we're not if it is not economically feasible."

The commission voted the same on each project, 3-3, with Jimmy Adams, Nikolai Ivanoff, and Larry Pederson casting votes to approve, Randy Romenesko, Greg Smith and Tom Sparks voting no. A majority is required for a measure to pass. Commissioner Charlie Weiss was absent.

Commissioners told the project managers they were welcome to return to the panel with modified plans, or take their cases on appeal to the Nome Common Council for another opinion.

The commission will need an appointment to fill the seat of its chairman, Tom Sparks, who resigned effective at the end of the Nov. 9 meeting. Sparks has been appointed to the Nome Common Council to replace Mary Knodel who resigned last month. Sparks said he did not feel it was fair to the public for him to serve on the two panels. That the Nome Common Council must ratify actions forwarded from the Nome Planning Commission presents a potential conflict of interest and erosion of checks and balances if Sparks were to serve at both tables.

NSEDC reelects chair, president

By Laurie McNicholas

Dan Harrelson of White Mountain was reelected as chairman of the Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. board of directors at an annual meeting Nov. 9 in Unalakleet. The 15-member board favored Harrelson by a 9-6 vote over challenger Eugene Asicksik of Shaktoolik.

The executive committee is composed of the board chairman, vice chairman, sergeant at arms and two additional board members. William (Middy) Johnson of Unalakleet declined a nomination for reelection as vice chairman, nominated Dean Peterson of Golovin as vice chairman and made a motion to cease nominations and to elect Peterson as vice chairman and reelect Oscar Takak of Elim as sergeant at arms by unanimous consent. The motion was

In separate elections for the two remaining executive committexx\e seats, Elvina Naranjo of Koyuk bested Don Stiles of Nome by a vote of 8-7. Then Stiles edged out Asicksik by an 8-7 vote for the other seat.

Janis Ivanoff won reelection as president of NSEDC by a vote of 11-4 over Asicksik. Johnson asked unanimous consent to reelect Simon Kineen as vice president, Rick Walicki as treasurer and Jerry Ivanoff as secretary of the corporation. The motion was adopted.

The board unanimously reelected John Handeland of Nome as an atlarge member of the finance committee. No one else applied for Handeland's seat, and there were no qualified applicants for the at-large seat vacated by former Nome resident Jack Carpenter, who had served on the finance committee for years.

Janis Ivanoff noted that NSEDC does not require two ad hoc members on the committee.

Leo Charles was elected to one of two at-large seats on the Norton Sound Seafood Products working group by unanimous consent. Frank McFarland of Nome narrowly won reelection to the second at-large seat, edging past Adem Boeckmann of Nome with a vote of 8-7.

Siu Alaska Corp., a wholly owned, for-profit subsidiary of NSEDC, held an annual shareholders meeting Nov. 9 in Unalakleet to elect two members of the Siu board of directors. Siu's shareholders are the 15 members of the NSEDC board. They reelected Takak to a seat affiliated with NSEDC and elected Steve Ivanoff of Unalakleet to an at-large seat on the Siu board.

Major acquisition pending

The NSEDC board moved a step closer to purchasing the K.D.S. Corp. in Kodiak by adopting a resolution to borrow funds to acquire the company. NSEDC declined a request to provide a copy of the resolution to The Nome Nugget.

During a meeting in August in Nome, the board approved a motion for NSEDC to purchase all quota shares from the K.D.S. Corp. and sell the vessel Patricia Lee to the Siu Alaska Corp., NSEDC's wholly owned for-profit subsidiary.

A video on the K.D.S. Corp. website described the company as a family owned business that harvests just over 1 million pounds of golden king crab annually in the Aleutian Islands area, owns the F/V Patricia Lee, a 130-foot catcher-processor, and uses the vessel to harvest the quota with a nine-member crew.

Siu Alaska Corp. owns the 123foot F/V Aleutian No. 1, and uses it to harvest NSEDC's Aleutian Islands golden king crab quota and Bering Sea opilio crab quota.

According to NSEDC's 2011 annual report, the target harvest of golden king crab for the Aleutian No. 1 totaled 66,150 pounds of CDQ quota and 550,004 pounds of IFQ quota in the eastern Aleutian Islands, and 241,522 pounds of IFQ quota in the western Aleutian Islands

The Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game reports that the golden king crab fishery is managed east and west of 174° W longitude with the following separate total allowable catch (TAC) level for each area in the 2012/2013 fishery.

The TAC east of 174° W longitude is 3.31 million pounds and is apportioned to IFQ 2,979,000 pounds, and CDQ 331,000 pounds. The TAC west of 174° W longitude is 2.98 million pounds and is apportioned to IFQ 2,682,000 pounds, and Adak Community Allocation 298,000 pounds.

Victor Joe honored

The NSEDC board and staff thanked Victor Joe for 20 years of service as the St. Michel member representative and presented him with gifts. Jerry Ivanoff, education, employment and training director, noted that Joe had served as a scholarship committee member since 1992 and had chaired the committee for the past several years. St. Michael residents elected Milton Cheemuk to the board in October.

Ivanoff said NSEDC's annual scholarship program fund grew from $30,000 in 1992 to $750,000 in 2012. The committee allocated a record $348.142 to 182 students for fall semester, and five students had returned $10,000 to the fund as of Sept. 30, he added.

Excellence demands to be celebrated. The School Board of the Bering Strait School District is honored to celebrate the accomplishments of the students who are listed on the honor roll. We would also like to thank all the parents who make sure students are well rested and ready to learn each and every day. A school cannot provide an excellent education without parental support. We take special pride in those students and parents who do their very best. Keep up the good work! We would also like to thank the teachers, paraprofessionals, and principals who help our children excel beyond our wildest imaginations. Thank You!

Unalakleet, Shaktoolik shine in BSSD Wrestling and Cheerleading Tournament

By Stephen Palmatier

Last weekend, the Bering Strait School District Elementary and Junior High Wrestling and Cheerleading Tournament took place in Unalakleet, where schools from all over the region came together to showcase their students in the excitement of wrestling and cheerleading.

Beginning Thursday night through late Saturday night, the tournament brimmed with energy from the competitors and the crowd. The tournament brought in large crowds filling the gym all weekend from the host town Unalakleet as well as from all around the region.

The teams that participated over the weekend included Unalakleet, Shaktoolik, Brevig Mission, Gambell, Savoonga, Koyuk, Elim, White Mountain, Golovin, Shishmaref, Teller, Stebbins, St. Michael, and most notably Little Diomede, which had not been a part of the tournament for many years.

With the amount of teams and students who showed up to the tournament, it made for some competitive and exciting action, particularly in the wrestling matches. In total, there were 19 different weight class championships, where the host Unalakleet won the most titles with four followed by five other teams each with two titles.

In the tournament, the teams were divided into small schools and large schools. In the large school, the host Unalakleet received the Best Wrestling Team award and Shaktoolik came away with the small school Best Team Wrestling award. Also, Alvin Washington of St. Michael and Gabe Stenek of Shishmaref came away with the most outstanding elementary wrestlers, while Siku Johnson of Unalakleet came away with the junior high wrestling award.

Even with the young ages of the competitors in the tournament, the sport was certainly not for the faint of heart. There were many stoppages of play over the weekend with countless injuries, including most notably a stop in the action on one of Elim's top wrestlers, Nathan Saccheus, in which it was later discovered he had broken his collarbone.

Even with all of the rough action by both boys and girls in the wrestling, perhaps what makes the tournament so great and successful is the mixture of the toughness of wrestling with the charm of cheerleading. As the wrestlers continued to fight one another, all the more than 100 cheerleaders would sit on the mats to the side and cheer on the competitors the entire tournament. They also competes in different cheerleading competitions, which included partner stunts, individual cheers, and the small and large school dance and cheer competitions. Once again, much like the wrestling, Shaktoolik and Unalakleet were the champs as they took home the small and large school cheering titles, respectively.

Once again, Unalakleet did a great job as host, keeping everything on schedule with very minimal delays throughout the busy tournament. It was one of the many things that made the tournament once again a huge success.

It is clear that when you witness all of the wrestling and cheerleading and see families taking pictures all day, the tournament is not just about wins and awards, but rather about seeing the young children display their talents and keeping up traditions of the sports that have passed down through their families' histo-

Lady Nanooks end season at State tournament

By Stephen Palmatier

The Nome Lady Nanooks volleyball team has struck their last ball of the season. The ladies ended their season last weekend at the 3A State tournament in Wasilla, winning one match and losing in two others.

The ladies, coming off their season high point winning the Western Conference regional tournament in Barrow, looked to ride the momentum and confidence into the state tournament as state champions, but it was not quite meant to be.

The ladies started off the tournament on a strong note, defeating Monroe Catholic in three sets to one, 26-24, 20-25, 25-18, and 29-27. It was a hard fought match, but like much of the season, the ladies were able to stand tall and take down their first round opponent.

The ladies then had a matchup with Mt. Edgecumbe, which was vastly different for the Lady Nanooks. The ladies did not get off to a good start, and from there it just got worse as the match progressed, eventually leading to a straight set loss, 15-25, 10-25, and 5-25. Mt. Edgecumbe, who would go on to win the state title, was overwhelming for the Lady Nanooks and was certainly the best team they had played all sea-

"The girls were down in the dumps before the game and we never were able to bounce back," said Lucas Frost, head coach of the Lady Nanooks.

The ladies were still in the tournament, being a double-elimination bracket, and it set up a match with Skyview. This was an intriguing match in the fact that the two teams had seen each other twice earlier in the season when the Lady Nanooks participated in the Homer Tournament. It was clear that the two teams were very evenly matched, and for this match, it went to Skyview, as they defeated the Lady Nanooks in three tough, brutal sets, 25-23, 26-24, and 25-22. The third set was especially interesting as the ladies got down early, 3-13, but were able to fight back only to fall just short. Even in the loss however, Coach Frost was very satisfied with his team's play.

"The girls played really great volleyball. Service errors killed us though due to close sets," said Frost. "I was particularly proud of their third set in the Skyview match as they bounced back from a huge deficit. It was a representation of our team and this season," said Frost.

Frost's perspective is dead on with his team's resiliency, but nonetheless, it was disappointing to see the ladies fall to a team that they had beaten before this year. The way to view the tournament can be done in two ways. Is it a success for the ladies to have won a match and competed in State? Or was it disappointing to wonder if they could have won the state title or competed near the top with the balanced team they showed this year?

Regardless of the argument of the state tournament, there is no doubt that what the ladies did this year was remarkable. The combination of experience and skill was something to marvel at every time you watched

"It was a great season! Winning their first Western Conference Championship and a first round win in state was more than a lot of people expected," said Frost.

With the season coming to an end though also means the loss of four senior starters: Taylor Pomeranz, Rebecca Luce, Devynn Johnson and Dylan Johnson. With all four being some of the best on the squad, the question will be if the Nome ladies will have as strong of a team next season, which will be led most notably by juniors Ariana Horner and Dawn Wehde and sophomore Kathy Holly. But as long as the Nanooks have the passionate and intense coaching of Frost and a solid, wellbalanced team across the board, don't expect these ladies to go anywhere but the same or up in progress

"I am really proud of these ladies overall this season," said Frost.

Nome Nanooks wrestle in Chugiak

The Nanooks did just that, they competed, as they were able to muster out one champion once again in Emery Booshu and a second place finish in Leif Erikson. Booshu and Erikson continue to both shine for the Nanooks and have helped Nome all season gain high spots in the team points. Nome was not great in the tough competition of the tournament and will look to use it as a good building experience for the program in the future, and they can start to use it this coming weekend when they

Stroke prevention: How to prevent a brain attack

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Few medical emergencies scare people as much as a stroke. The idea of being fully functional one minute, full of life with a clear mind, then suddenly losing the ability to speak, move, walk, see, or understand words is frightening.

More concerning is the fact that there is very little that can be done to stop the effects of a stroke once it has occurred. If caught right away, doctors can sometimes give clotbusting medications to open clogged vessels in the brain. But these medications cannot be used in everyone and may even make the stroke worse in some people.

The best time to stop a stroke is long before it starts.

Strokes are sometimes called brain attacks. This is because a clot in an artery of the brain is the most common cause of a stroke, the same way a clot in an artery of the heart causes a heart attack.

A brain clot usually forms outside the brain in a vessel that feeds into the arteries of the brain. When the clot breaks off, it travels to the brain and becomes lodged in a smaller vessel. This prevents blood flow. The brain cells that were fed by the clogged artery begin to die from a lack of oxygen that in turn causes the sudden loss of bodily functions dependent on the part of the brain affected by the stroke.

A small percentage of strokes are not caused by a clot, but from bleeding from a vessel in the brain, called a hemorrhagic stroke. Emergency room physicians rely on a CT scan to rapidly determine if a stroke is being caused by a clot or by bleed-

Symptoms of a stroke can be profound with sudden loss of consciousness, weakness of one side of the body, or a sudden inability to communicate. Smaller strokes may merely cause weakness in one part of the body or be associated with visual changes, headaches, or numbness in an extremity.

A mini-stroke, called transient ischemic attack (TIA) is similar to a full stroke but unlike a full stroke, the symptoms resolve within a few hours. TIAs are concerning because they often precede a full stroke.

So how can a person prevent a stroke? It turns out that up to 82 percent of strokes can be prevented by creating a lifestyle with these five simple habits:

1) Avoid tobacco. Chemicals in tobacco cause damage to the vessels of the brain, accelerate hardening of the arteries, and increase pressure in the cardiovascular system. People who smoke cigarettes double, triple, or even quadruple their chances of having a stroke at some point in the future. There is no safe number of cigarettes. Even one cigarette a day increases a person's risk of having a

2) Keep a healthy blood pressure. High blood pressure, called hypertension, is one of the most significant causes of stroke, and it is one of the easiest symptoms to control if caught early. The goal is to keep the average blood pressure below 140/90 for otherwise healthy individuals, or below 130/80 if a person has a history of heart disease, TIA, previous stroke, or diabetes mellitus. Many people are able to maintain a healthy blood pressure without medication by eating a healthy diet, staying physically active, limiting alcohol consumption, and avoiding tobacco products. If a blood pressure medication is required, your ALASKA doctor will discuss the op-FAMILY tions that best fit your lifestyle and other health DOCTOR needs.

3) Maintain a healthy weight. Obesity, defined as a body mass index above 30 kg/m2, increases a person's risk of having a stroke by 65 percent. Healthy weight loss and weight management reduces the risk of stroke.

Weight loss also has a profound effect on high blood pressure. Many people are able to decrease or even discontinue blood pressure medication after losing only 10% of their body weight. A lower blood pressure further lowers a person's risk of

4) Eat healthy foods. People who eat a diet rich in vegetables, fruits, nuts, and healthy oils (like olive oil, fish oil, and seal oil) lower their risk of stroke by 60 percent.

5) Stay physically active. Active people, compared to inactive people, lower their risk of stroke by up to 64 percent. The American Heart Association recommends at least 30 minutes of moderate-intensity physical activity daily.

Research shows that these five recommendations may also help prevent a second stroke in people who have experienced a previous stroke

Saying it Sincerely

Rev. Karen L Sonray, Our Savior Lutheran Church Member of the Nome Ministerial Association

I tell you this poor widow gave more than all the others. For the others put in what they had to spare of their riches; but she, poor as she is, put in all she had - she gave all she had to live on. Mark 12: 44

Just prior to this story, we hear that the greatest of the commandments is to, "love the Lord your God with all your heart, with all your mind and with all your strength." This is a direct quote of the "Shema" from Deuteronomy 6. Every Jewish child would memorize this scripture, as it is of utmost im-

The widow in this story has not only memorized the "Shema," but she is living it — as seen in her giving of herself. When this widow gives all she has, Jesus remarks on her faithfulness. Yet she only gave 2 cents! How can 2 cents be considered generous? It was all she had. Others give a percentage of their abundance; the widow gives everything out of her scarcity.

I remember hearing an elder say that when God says "all" God means everything! So when God says cast all your cares upon the Lord, it means everything that worries you! When God says we are to love with all our heart, mind and strength, that means we are to love God with everything.

Ironically in a nation where widows are to be looked after, it is the widow who exemplifies generosity. Over and over, the Bible surprises us with this theme. People on the edge of society, often voiceless and powerless, end up teaching those of status and power what sharing and trusting in God is all about. Often people who have been tested severely end up being the most resilient and rich in life's wisdom.

As I write this article, it is Veteran's Day. I am reminded of the generous sacrifice of many veterans in our United States history. While they are active in the Armed Services, soldiers are essentially handing the nation a "blank check." They are willing to give all they have, including their lives, for our freedom. Many have indeed paid the ultimate sacrifice.

We too are called to give our "all" - talents, time, and possessions - toward a better future: God's future. It may not seem we have much to give. But our little gift and talent can be seed for great things to come. Give your all! Be courageous in the giving of yourself.

The dispatch center initiated 120 calls for service which covers everything from foot patrol to ambulance requests to criminal events. What you see in the Seawall are just those events where a person was taken into custody or events where there is a significant public inter-

What is missing from both of these is the myriad of phone calls that are answered both by dispatch and officers which cover everything from requests for telephone numbers to questions about how to handle relationship issues to people who are calling in because they are concerned for somebody else. Chief's Notes of public safety is a busy place, but it's also a place where there is always time for you: some times to answer a question, sometimes to help you take care of someone else and sometimes to help take care of you. We do our best to make sure that you and those you care for are provided a safe and secure place to live your lives. But we need your help to do it.

Each day, the police, fire and ambulance deal with any number of emergencies. Many could be prevented. As a citizen, you can report suspicious activity, or lend a hand when things get a little out of control. You can do simple things like making sure that your fire detectors are working properly; make sure all of the lights on your vehicle are functioning so you can see dur-ing times of darkness and so others can see you;

or by making sure that you and those you care about are wearing reflective clothing that might help a motorist see you before someone is injured. You can take your time and make sure that you always stop at stop signs or slow down in places where there is heavy pedestrian traffic (like on Bering Street); or stop someone from driving after they have been drinking. The simple things like making sure your doors are locked and the keys for your ATV or vehicle are secured can prevent becoming a victim. All these things are within your control.

What we can't control though, is the actions of others. That's why it's important to know the people who you associate with and always practice safety when you are out and about. And though I focus much of my advice on those who choose to enjoy the services of various social establishments around town, the same rules apply to going to private residences. In order to be safe, you have to practice safety all of the times, no matter what age you are.

Adults are one thing, but children are another. I remember long ago when I was growing up that kids were raised by the community. If I did something wrong, my parents knew about long before I could get back to my house to confess my sins. The discipline I received was immediate and corrective, and it didn't take me long to recognize that the way to avoid those corrective incidents was by not doing the things that caused them. Nome still has some of the old time allure, but think to yourself, "When is the last time that I tried to make a difference in a child's life?" Dealing with the youth of today, I sometimes wonder how any parent can surren-der their responsibility to the school or to other government agencies faced with trying to instill good habits and discipline among youth. I thought about this the other night while assisting an officer while he was contacting two young boys who thought it was okay to hit other youths with a hockey stick and hockey pucks. Where are the parents of these children and who is taking responsibility for their development

Being the Chief of Police, many of the kids around town know who I am – particular while working around the ice rink. It's gratifying to see so many kids out enjoying the ice and the volunteers work hard to make sure it is a safe place for them to be. We pick up after the kids, loan them equipment and make sure the ice is kept in a safe condition. What we can't do is mediate the variety of disputes that arise among the kids. Many times, a child will approach me and tell me that someone is being mean to them

I do my best to contact the offender and try to modify behavior. But what happens after I'm gone? I'm not the parent. I've overheard Char-lie Painter telling many kids who come to him with similar complaints for them to, "tell your parents." He also does his best to stop negative behaviors, but we can't be there all of the time

The solution to this dilemma is for all of us to step up to the plate. If you see a child doing something wrong, challenge it and follow up with a phone call to their parent. If your child is at either end of a problem, listen to what they have to say and contact the other parents. Work together to resolve the issue and show not only that you care about your child, but the other child also. Kids need to know that somebody is watching. Let that somebody be you.

District 39 aligns with nation to reelect President Obama

By Diana Haecker

President Barack Obama has won four more years in the White House at last week's general elections, although his Republican opponent Mitt Romney has carried the majority of votes in Alaska.

Nationwide, Obama received a popular vote of 62,085,892 or 50.6 percent over Romney's popular vote of 58,777,012 or 47.9 percent. Obama needed 270 electoral votes for re-election and received 332. Romney got 206 electoral votes, including the three Alaskan electoral votes.

In yet unofficial results, the State of Alaska's Division of Election counted 121,234 or 55 percent of votes for Romney and 91,696 or 41.6 percent votes for Barack Obama.

Although absentee and questioned ballots yet have to be counted, it is clear that Republican Don Young won his 21st term at the House of Representatives with 141,276 votes or 64.7 percent against Democratic challenger Sharon Cissna with 62,013 votes or 28.4 percent.

Conservation came to Nome and continued on to the island to put boots on the ground and conduct shoreline surveys.

DEC spokesman Ty Keltner said that one more bird was found alive and had been sent to an Anchorage rehabilitation and rescue center.

Coast Guard spokesman Mosley said that the investigators first went to Gambell, met with the community and leaders on Friday evening. On Saturday, they flew to Savoonga, met with the community and conducted a shoreline search. "So far, no source of the oil has been identified," Mosley said. "We found one more bird, a common murre, alive and it has been taken to Anchorage for clean up and rehabilitation."

Mosley describes that the animals were not covered in oil, but had oily bellies as if they swam through an oil slick or in case of the seals, as if they laid on an oiled beach. Mosley said that the swift response is due to the fact that oiled marine mammals or birds are not just an environmental concern. "It's not only to protect the environment and the wildlife, but to protect the people who rely on the subsistence harvest of these animals for food," Mosley said.

The Coast Guard plans another fly-over later on this week. Mosley said he doubts that there is a connection to the sunken Russian fish processing vessel on the Russian side of the Bering Sea earlier this year. A lifeboat from that vessel ended up on a beach near Gambell.

The agencies said an update and a situation report would be provided on Tuesday afternoon, past the Nome Nugget's press time.

Local engagement

Regional leaders have recently debated whether or not to organize a regional "authority" to deal with policy matters as the opening of the Arctic due to shrinking summer sea ice triggers more ship and resource development traffic. So far, nothing has come to fruition. But a regional movement out of Unalakleet is underway to build capacity in the Bering Sea villages to respond to oil spills and other pollution disasters.

A group called Bering Sea Alliance LLC is in the process of being formed. Art Ivanoff of Unalakleet has headed the effort to unite regional village corporations with the goal to create a spill response scheme in the villages in the event of oil or gas spills or oil discharges from large ships passing through.

Ivanoff said he saw the need for such an alliance to form, not with the intent to hamper resource development, but rather to work with the oil companies to ensure that development is done responsibly, with local input and in such a way that it does not harm the environment and the subsistence way of life. Meetings took place in May and August to get the alliance off the ground and to start the dialogue with Shell, Statoil and ConocoPhillips.

Ivanoff said that on board so far are the Unalakleet Village Corp., Mark Johnson of Nome, Sitnasuak Native Corp., and the village corporations of Brevig Mission, St. Michael, Golovin, Shaktoolik, White Mountain and Gambell.

"I entertained the thought of such a coalition for years now," said Ivanoff. "I realized that each of our villages doesn't have the resources to come up with a spill response plan on our own to build capacity and to protect the resource we depend on."

Ivanoff is making the case for being prepared and having the tools and knowledge in place around the Bering Strait region to respond to oil spill pollution as experts predict a dramatic increase in shipping traffic through the Bering Strait and Norton Sound area.

Ballot measure 1 asked voters whether or not to create a convention to revise the Alaska constitution. The measure was turned down with 68 percent of the voters saying no. A transportation bond measure was before the voters and it was approved by 56.6 percent, or 118,613 of the voters. It asked "Shall the State of Alaska issue its general obligation bonds in the principal amount of not more than $453,499,200 for the purpose of paying the cost of state transportation projects?" By approving the bond, Nome will receive $10 million for improvement and expansion projects at the Port of Nome.

out Republican challenger Allen Minish by receiving 6,545 votes or 76.87 percent of the votes.

In House District 39, including Nome and regional Bering Strait and Norton Sound villages, Democrat Neal Foster ran unopposed and got 4,162 or 96.5 percent of the votes.

Jurisdiction wide, House District 39/T voted with 3,052 votes for Barack Obama. Only 1,953 voters supported Mitt Romney. According to the unofficial results, Golovin had the highest voter turnout with 77 of 109 registered voters casting their ballots, or 70.64 percent. The next highest turnout was reported from Wales, with a voter participation of 60.4 percent. The majority of voters in the 15 Bering Strait/Norton Sound communities surrounding Nome, voted for Obama.

According to State unofficial results, out of 2,486 eligible voters, 1,084 ballots were cast in both Nome precincts, making for a 43.7 percent voter turn out. In Nome, 619 voted for Obama, 401 voters cast their cards for Romney. In the race for House Representative, 722 Nomeites voted for Don Young, 297 for Sharon Cissna. For the State Senate, 551 Nome voters cast their cards for Donny Olson and 183 for Allen Minish. In the race for State House Representative, 918 Nome voters re-elected Neal Foster. Nome voters also approved the bonding proposition with 761 yes votes to 264 no

Council mulls funding priorities, port at top of wish list

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council met in a work session Monday evening before their regular meeting to comb over lists of funding priorities to hand over to the State Legislature and the delegation at the federal level.

Mayor Denise Michels and City Manager Josie Bahnke led the Council through a list of priorities drawn up at the first of the year so that the panel could rearrange and knock off the list those needs that had been solved or lost emphasis.

Nome's port consultant, Paul Fuhs presented Port of Nome causeway extension into deep waters to make it competitive as an arctic port and advocated upgrades to the existing harbor infrastructure.

Port use is burgeoning, Fuhs said. Statistics show 436 dockings in the 2012 season compared to 271 last year.

Fuhs with the help of Joy Baker, harbormaster, is trying with the City to get port improvements into Gov. Sean Parnell's budget before it comes out next month.

These priorities include $200,000 for dredging to 8-foot depth a place for small dredges to hole up during bad weather. "You could use all local contractors," he said. "It would be work for them."

More immediately, the Port of Nome needs a new barge ramp at a cost of about $17 million. Nine million dollars of the cost can come from $10 million Nome received from a government obligation bond the State's voters passed on Nov. 6.

The Council hopes the remainder can come out of the state budget. The remaining $1 million will go to design work for the causeway extension.

The port is also looking for funding for a middle dock addition between cells along the causeway.

In the past, the City has pushed for $150 million for causeway and other expansions. Now that figure has been cut to a more palatable $50-70 million.

Fuhs told the Council he thought the port had a good chance for additional funding, because it already had operable infrastructure and could get onto the funding "thoroughfare" more easily compared to sites just starting the push without existing services.

The word from Paul LaBolle, legislative aide to Rep. Neal Faster, was that both sides of the Legislature were pushing fiscal restraint. Laura Lawrence, aide to Sen. Donny Olson, said that since districts have been redrawn a factor in funding was not the increase in numbers of people, but the increase in numbers of communities represented by Olson—now 90 communities.

"The new district is larger than the State of Texas," Lawrence said. However, "we expect federal backing on all arctic issues. The port fits in."

The City's lobbyist at the federal level, Larry Markley, said that he feels there would be less than a 50 percent chance of money earmarked for special projects, although there was "growing pressure to do something about the earmarking moratorium."

Investigation into oiled wildlife continues

By Diana Haecker

The Coast Guard and the Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation are still investigating the occurrence of oiled wildlife seen near St. Lawrence Island and Shishmaref.

In addition to two spotted seals with oil stains on their bellies — one harvested in Shishmaref the first week of September and one harvested in Gambell on Oct. 16 — a sub-adult ringed seal was harvested near Gambell on Monday, Nov. 12.

The seal showed oil stains on its back as well as signs of hair loss and skin lesions between its flippers. The ringed seal, as well as the spotted seal harvested in Shishmaref, were sent to the North Slope Borough's wildlife veterinarian Raphaela Stimmelmayr for necropsy. Stimmelmayr said that the necropsy results are "very preliminary" and that more samples are being sent out this week for tissue oil testing as well as histopathology.

Ty Keltern, spokesman for the Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation said that so far, no results have been found as to the source of the oil spill, the nature of the product or date or location of the spill.

An ADEC situation report from last week said that samples collected from the seal harvested in Gambell on Oct. 16 indicate that the animal was affected by "heavier" petroleum product.

In addition to the seals, a crested auklet, and several common murres were observed with oily bellies near Gambell.

One bird was harvested, one was found alive and sent to an Anchorage rehab center, seven murres were

RIBBON CUTTING— Indian Health Service director of Environmental Health and Engineering Rear Admiral Gary Hartz and NSHC board chairwoman Emily Hughes did the honors of cutting the ribbon during the Grand Opening ceremony of the new regional hospital on Wednesday, Nov. 14, 2012.

New Regional hospital celebrated with ribbon cutting

By Diana Haecker

Tears of joy and overwhelming emotions streamed down Emily Hughes' face during last week's ribbon cutting ceremony of the new regional hospital.

Health Corporation's Board of Directors Chair Hughes, other NSHC board members, employees, federal dignitaries and a big crowd of regional and Nome residents were on hand to witness the ceremonial coming-to-life of the newly built facility on Greg Kruschek Avenue at the northeast end of Nome.

John Handeland was the master of ceremonies and welcomed the crowd. After an invocation by former Golovin Health Aide Irene Aukongak, Emily Hughes stepped to the microphone and, overcome with emotions, said that this new hospital is testament to all the hard work put in by the board and that it belongs to every single person in the region as a place of healing and wellness.

Hughes thanked the board of directors, past and present, for their vision to put in tireless work to make the new hospital a reality. She also praised the collaboration it took between the board, regional, state and federal entities to cooperate on the project.

The American Recovery and Reinvestment Act provided an investment of $144 million, the lion's share of the funds needed for the $168 million hospital. The Denali Commission contributed $15 million, of which some dollars went towards building the adjacent Quyanna Care Center facility, and the Indian Health Service contributed $9 million to the facility.

Chief's notes: NPD finds homes for strays—puppies easy, adults a challenge

Bv NPD Chief John Papasodora A few months ago, long-time Animal Control Officer Amy Smithhisler decided it was time to retire and head off to golden pastures. Since that time, the entire Nome Police Department has been pitching-in to provide animal control support for the people of Nome. At times it has been quite the daunting challenge.

It doesn't seem like a week passes before we have a puppy show up at the shelter - sometimes barely weaned from its mother. Many times, the puppy was kenneled in dispatch where it could be cared for and many other times a member of the staff would take it home and care for it overnight rather than to leave it alone out in the shelter. We were fairly successful in finding homes for the puppies with two eventually adopted by staff members. But we haven't been quite so lucky with adult dogs.

We currently have four small to medium sized adult dogs out in the shelter, all of who need good homes. Though we have posted them on Nome Announce several times, there doesn't seem to be much interest and eventually, these dogs will have to be euthanized as we don't have the staff to care for them indefinitely. It's an unfortunate but true reality in the animal control business. So - if you feel like giving one of these convicts a new lease on life, please feel free to give Renee a call at 443-8517.

Some of the incidents we run into can be perplexing. We recently found a dog that was listed on Nome Announce as missing. An officer captured the shivering little dog and brought it to the shelter where it was cared for. We called the owner and told them that we found their dog and that they could come claim the cute little dog after paying the associated fine for having a dog running loose. We were promptly told (expletives deleted) that we could just go ahead and keep the dog - because the owner wasn't about to pay to get the dog back. I could only conclude that the cute little dog just didn't mean that much to the owner. Not only because they wouldn't pay the fees to claim the dog, but because they hadn't taken the time to make sure they were properly restrained in the first place.

On another day, we received a call from one of the local commuter airlines letting us know that there was a crate full of puppies at the airline that had just arrived from the village - and - the crate was addressed to the Nome Animal Shelter. I was a bit confused as up to this point I thought that the shelter was for the City of Nome. Our Administrative Assistant (Renee) spent several hours that day working on that particular issue as the shipper wouldn't take the dogs back and the airlines obviously weren't in a position to run a kennel. It was finally arranged that the puppies would be shipped to another shelter (courtesy of donated services from NAC and ERA) where there was full-time staff to care for them. The puppies were eventually taken care of, but at the cost of nearly an entire day of time. We did learn a lesson however and will not be taking possession of any more animals shipped to Nome from the villages.

Then there was the day that one of our officers rescued a tiny puppy from a dumpster where it had been discarded. Because it was so tiny and helpless, the puppy was brought to the office and cared for by a number of staff members. After a few days the person who called in the 'puppy in the dumpster' again called – this time to assuage their guilt. It seems they had put the puppy in the dumpster because they didn't want it anymore and knew that if it was in the dumpster then we would have to come get it. Unbelievably, the caller wanted the puppy back. Didn't hap-

And finally, last week we had a woman suffer a serious dog bite while she was walking down 3rd Avenue. A request for information was posted on Nome Announce, but as yet we have received little information to help identify the offending animal. If you know anything about this incident, please give us a call. I fear the next event may involve a child or someone who is less able to defend themselves. As we did not find the animal, the victim in this case will have to receive a very painful series of shots. It just doesn't seem right that she should be victimized twice because someone didn't control their dog.

The City of Nome has fairly com-

Who Has Our Back? Western Alaskans like our seal oil, not oiled seal. We like our cranberries to give us vitamin C, not a radioactive Cesium glow. Salmon and moose are a mainstay on our tables. Mining politics, nuclear meltdown and increased ocean freighter traffic have put us on notice that

By Robin Johnson

An Apple Professional Development Specialist, Sally Eberhart, visited Nome Elementary School to work with teachers and students on iPads and Literacy instruction. Mrs. Eberhart spent all day Friday in classrooms with students and teachers modeling instructional strategies for teachers while introducing students to systems and routines.

Saturday was an optional training day for teachers. Twenty-two NPS teachers and administrators opted to attend this training on a Saturday. The training addressed Literacy instruction with iPads as well as classroom management and workflow techniques. Teachers, among other things, learned how to organize student audio work samples in iTunes wirelessly, and to access free books for their students.

causeway extension and harbor improvements in starring roles on the City's community support wish list for the Legislature. Alongside came other transportation issues-money for running Steadman Street to Greg Kruschek Drive for community expansion. Additionally, the Council lodged its support for completing a feasibility study as foundation for building a road from Fairbanks to Nome to support resource and economic development by bringing materials to the Port of Nome for distribution and transshipments to the 30 or so communities served by the port.

The City is also petitioning the Legislature for money to build a multi-use sportsplex near the Nome Recreation Center to be used year around, especially for youth to use for activities during harsh weather.

The Council removed portable package gear for Nome Volunteer Fire Dept. to take to villages to assist in fighting fires. That need was met by Norton Sound Economic Development Corp., which funded the request with $75,000.

In its place, the City and NVFD listed a new firefighting and rescue engine. The department's newest pumping engine is on a 1987 Boardman pumper with a capacity of 1,000 gallons per minute. Larger structures in Nome have outgrown this capacity and made the vehicle fall short of community insurance standards.

NVFD is eying a vehicle equipped with a 1,500 gallon per minute fire pump, 1,000 gallon water tank, water master stream, class A, class B foam systems, 10 kw generator, light tower, pre-connected rescue tools, ergonomically designed pump panel, hose bed and ladder to prevent injury during operations, as well as a full complement of rescue compartments. And there you have it, for an estimated $600,000 plus cost of shipping to Nome.

Supt. Mike Brawner put his best foot forward to prioritize legislative funding for a Nome Public Schools district office sprinkler in a building that also houses Anvil Science Academy ($410,777), continuing upgrades of digital control system for heating and ventilation at the high school ($614,261) and Nome-Beltz campus electrical service and generator system ($650,000).

NJUS has a measure at the top of their priority list to get additional relief for high power costs by raising the Power Cost Equalization assistance to cover the first 700 kwh. Currently the assistance applies to only the first 500 kwh.

Another boost for lower fuel costs would result from raising the community population limit to let Nome participate in the State's Bulk Fuel Revolving Loan fund to assist in buying bulk fuel supplies. Currently eligibility suits communities with less than 2,000 residents with a loan amount capped at $750,000.

The Council will take up the priority lists and make them final at its next regular meeting.

New hire at the Nome Police Dept., Officer Justin Timm took the oath of office administered by City Clerk Tom Moran.

The Council passed a resolution approving high bids in the sale of 14 surplus vehicles that brought $39,000 into City coffers. Sales of other equipment-loader and snowblower-to Nome Joint Utility System raised the total to $59,000.

Last and least, vexing to the ears of all who attended the meeting and are paying high-energy costs: DNR biologist Bob Swenson delivered a report on energy sources for local use. After years of speculation on energy development, especially among the Nome Joint Utility System Board

NSEDC hatchery study looks toward the long-term

Communications Director

The recent Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation board meetings in Unalakleet produced some exciting news-an additional $100,000 Community Benefit Share for each member community and a $1 million Community Energy Fund project for Nome—but the decision receiving the most attention is that to investigate the feasibility of a salmon hatchery program for the Norton Sound region.

And rightfully so.

A regional hatchery program is a big and exciting idea. It's also a complex and long road ahead-if NSEDC and the region choose to follow it.

At this point, NSEDC's board has tasked its staff to outline a feasibility study that would start to answer numerous questions and guide foundational decisions. This is only the very start of a process that could easily take more than a decade to be fully realized. However, NSEDC recognizes the importance of making a long-term commitment to salmon restoration and enhance-

At the outset of this study, the first and most important question is whether or not our residents want to see a hatchery program developed. NSEDC hopes to work closely with the Regional Planning Team in answering this question, as members of the team will soon be traveling to each of NSEDC's member communities to gather input for the update of the Comprehensive Salmon Plan. This will be an opportune time for residents to express their thoughts on whether a regional hatchery is desired and, if so, what species and locations they would like to see targeted. Dates, times and locations for each meeting will be posted in advance; NSEDC will also publicize the meeting schedules on our web-

Some of the big questions to be investigated involve:

• What type or types of salmon species could/should a regional hatchery potentially produce and at what quantity level? Pink and chum salmon are much simpler to raise in a hatchery since they can go to sea after hatching, where kings and silvers require a much more complex facility in order to allow at least an additional year of growth before fish are released.

- · Where would the hatchery or hatcheries be located?
- Where would hatchery stock(s) be taken and where would fish be
- Would a hatchery program's aim be more geared toward rehabilitating diminished runs or primarily producing more harvest opportunity?
- What permitting requirements will need to be satisfied for ADF&G? Permitting alone is a process that can be measured in years, and is a significant component of hatchery operations. Previous attempts by other entities to develop a hatchery in the Norton Sound region have faltered at the ADF&G permitting stage.
- Other areas to cover include costs, potential funding sources and partnering opportunities. Water also figures large in the issues to be studied. The temperature and amount of water available are critical factors in choosing a hatchery site. The ability to recycle water will also be important since recycling will likely be required to reduce energy costs and will help accelerate fish development. Developing a facility in the region that meets these water requirements will take significant work in terms of site selection and infrastructure.

Please note that this is not a commitment from NSEDC to build a hatchery. A hatchery program may or may not be right for the region. But NSEDC is excited to investigate the potential need and feasibility of constructing a viable operation. Where these initial efforts will lead is unknown at this point, but we can say with assurance that any progress toward the development of a hatchery program will need to be done with the support of the region's residents and entities.

Any hatchery plan will need to receive the support of the Northern Bering Sea Regional Aquaculture Association (NoBS RAA), an ADF&G-recognized group made up of representatives from throughout the region.

We look forward to the work ahead and the input from our member community residents and organ-

NSEDC expands golden king crab holdings

By Laurie McNicholas

Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. has acquired 1.2 million pounds of Western Aleutian Islands golden king crab quota by purchasing KDS Inc., a Seattlebased fishing company that primarily harvests golden king crab in the Western Aleutian Islands fishery, according to an NSEDC press release issued Nov. 15. The release said KDS Inc. is now a wholly owned subsidiary of NSEDC.

The acquisition increases NSEDC's holdings of Individual Fishing Quota in the Western Aleutian Islands golden king crab fishery from 241,522 pounds to about 1.44 million pounds. The 2012 total allowable catch (TAC) of IFQ golden king crab in the Western Aleutian Islands fishery is approximately 2.68 million pounds.

"For well over a decade this fishery has proven itself exceptionally stable in terms of commercial harvest levels," states the press release. "NSEDC also comes into the deal with extensive experience in the fishery through Siu Alaska Corp. and its ownership stake in the crabbing vessel Aleutian No. 1." Siu Alaska Corp. is NSEDC's wholly owned for-profit subsidiary. "The captains and crews of the Aleutian No. 1 have successfully fished the remote Western Aleutian Islands gold king crab fishery for years and will now be contracted to fish quota for KDS Inc.," adds the release.

The press release said smaller holdings of Bering Sea opilio crab quota and St. Matthew Island blue king crab quota are included in the KDS Inc. purchase, along with a significant portion of the TAC of Western Aleutian Islands red king crab, a fishery that currently is closed. The transaction also includes the F/V Patricia Lee, a catcher-processor that KDS Inc. has sold to Siu Alaska Corp., the release added.

The Nome Nugget asked Tyler Rhodes, NSEDC communication director, what the company paid KDS Inc. for the crab quota and the Patricia Lee. "The value of the transaction is not being disclosed," he

"Bringing KDS into the NSEDC family is a significant and positive move for both our organization and the 15 member communities we represent," said NSEDC board chairman Dan Harrelson of White Mountain. "When NSEDC expands into different fisheries, our corporation becomes more stable. By Denise Thomas, Unalakleet School

Monday, November 12, 24 of the 56 Unalakleet Veterans attended a Veteran's Day lunch at the Unalakleet School. The school cooks prepared ham, pork loin, baked potatoes, corn and hot rolls. The FEA (Future Educators of Alaska) Club provided desserts for the Veterans and the Unalakleet high school choir sang the National Anthem.

Also, the sixth grade students made invitations before the event and delivered them to the Veterans, baked cookies that were given to each Veteran and waited on the tables while the Veterans enjoyed lunch. During lunch a slide show of the Veterans was playing. The slide show had pictures of Veterans during their military service or a current picture and told which branch of service he/she served in.

It was a special event to see this many Veterans together in the school at one time.

Nome wrestlers fight stiff competition in Palmer

By Stephen Palmatier

For the fifth straight weekend, the Nome Nanooks wrestling squad went on the road to compete in a tournament outside of Nome.

This time, it was in Palmer at the Lancer Smith Wrestling Tournament where the Nanooks saw very strong competition from teams at the 1A, 2A, 3A and 4A levels.

Last weekend, the Nanooks did what they have been doing all season in tournaments, competing. The Nanooks finished with one second place finisher along with a fourth place and two fifth place finishers.

Emery Booshu took the 2nd place finish for Nome, once again leading the team in the tournaments. However, it was a second place finish that was unfamiliar territory for Booshu this season, as he had rolled into championships for many of the tournaments thus far this year. Booshu lost to John Pounds of Service High School, the state champion last year in a tight 4-3 decision in the final.

Another consistent high finisher for the Nanooks this season has been Alex Grey in the 98-pound weight class. Grey once again performed well, finishing 4th in the bracket. Grey unfortunately sustained an injury during the tournament, which prevented him from fighting in the third place match, which resulted in a fourth place finish.

The fifth place finishers for Nome came with the brothers Junyor and Lief Erikson in the 152- and 113pound weight classes, respectively. Junyor Erikson won his fifth place match by getting a pin over Gabe McSharry in three minutes and 58 seconds.

The Nanooks will now get a week off to prepare for the upcoming Northern Conference Regional Tournament in Kotzebue on November 30 and December 1. The top two wrestlers in each weight class at the Regionals will then qualify for the 1A2A3A State Wrestling Tournament in Nikiski.

Workshop to present new research on Chinook salmon declines in AYK region

The Arctic-Yukon-Kuskokwim Sustainable Salmon Initiative program has worked for a year to develop a new Chinook salmon research action plan to address steep declines in populations of Chinook salmon in the Yukon, Kuskokwim and Unalakleet rivers that are critical to subsistence communities.

A workshop highlighting new research on causes of the Chinook population declines in the AYK region is scheduled Dec. 10 and 11 at the Sheraton Hotel in Anchorage. The workshop is designed for Alaska Native leaders, fishers and community members from the AYK region. It is open to the public free of charge. Scientists and staff from state and federal agencies and the salmon research community will participate in the event. The following information is based on the workshop agenda posted on the AYK SSI website.

Most presentations will focus on new research and analyses from the AYK SSI Chinook salmon expert panel process. Daniel Schindler of the University of Washington School of Aquatic and Fishery Sciences and Chuck Krueger of the Great Lakes Fish Commission will describe the expert panel process, the development of the research action plan, and priorities of the draft action plan.

Schindler also will present an overview of a multivariate model used to test freshwater and marine hypotheses. He will present the overview in place of Mark Scheuerell, Northwest Fisheries Science Center, National Marine Fisheries Service.

Matt Catalano of Auburn University will present an overview of evidence of Chinook population declines, and a comparative analysis of patterns of productivity between AYK and selected non-AYK Chinook salmon stocks.

The title of a presentation by Kate Myers, University of Washington School of Aquatic and Fishery Sciences (retired) has yet to be deter-

Mike Bradford of the Simon Fraser University School of Resource and Environmental Management will explore changes in productivity of the freshwater life phase as a driver of Chinook salmon decline in the AYK region.

Jim Murphy of the Alaska Fisheries Science Center, NMFS, will discuss mortality during the early ocean life phase of Chinook in the eastern Bering Sea.

Diana Stram of the North Pacific Fisheries Management Council and Jim Ianelli of the Alaska Fisheries Science Center will address this question: Has marine fishery-caused mortality (bycatch) contributed significantly to the decline of AYK Chinook salmon stocks?

Jeffrey Hard of the Northwest Fisheries Science Center will provides answers to the question: Have selective fishing and natural mortality altered the size, sex ratio and composition of life history types and contributed to the decline of AYK Chinook salmon stocks?

Paul Hershberger, U.S. Geological Survey will assess the evidence of adult mortality from pathogens during upstream migration as a driver of declines in Yukon River

Chinook stocks.

The workshop will conclude with a management strategy evaluation session on Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 11. Mike Jones of the Michigan State University Quantitative Fisheries Center and Matt Catalano of Auburn University will describe an innovative approach to exploring management tradeoffs and creating dialogue between managers and stakeholders.

Space on the agenda is reserved for speakers from the AYK region who have not yet been determined.

Health Fair took Nomeites to the "Wonderful World of Wellness"

Story and photos by Diana Haecker

The Wizard of Oz was the theme that guided this year's Health Fair at the Nome Rec Center, sponsored by the Norton Sound Health Corporation's CAMP department.

Megan Timm, Prevention Program coordinator with CAMP said that she got the idea to go with the Wizard of Oz theme from her mother in Wisconsin.

To the soundtrack of "Somewhere Over the Rainbow" 784 Nomeites visited the Health Fair, and 90 took advantage of the discounted blood draw and analysis for blood typing, Vitamin D analysis, a comprehensive blood test or thyroid, prostate or diabetes screening. Timm said that the blood work for Vitamin D was only $50 compared to a "normal" price of approximately $600.

This year, 26 booths participated in the Health Fair. There was the UAF Extension Service, displaying the stunning amount of sugar in one bottle of soda pop. The Nome Community Center spread the message of

The Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game educated fair goers on bear safety; Kawerak handed out materials on how to become a foster parent and how to teach children about good and bad touches.

New this year was the Alaska Tribal Health Consortium's booth informing about their programs against sexual transmitted diseases, AIDS, a campaign to teach teens about healthy relationships and a suicide prevention program.

Dolores Guest, PhD, with the Parkinson's Institute traveled all the way from California to educate people on Parkinson's disease, its symptoms and treatment.

Further down the line of booths, the Nome Ministerial Association took prayer requests, Louis Murphy with NSHC's infection control gave free flu shots, the Nome Literacy Council handed out free books and NSHC audiologist Samantha Kleindienst checked people's hearing.

Murphy said that this year, there are enough free flu vaccines to go around for everybody. "The flu came around earlier this year than usual," Murphy said. The peak is not expected until January or February but Murphy hopes that the so-called "herd immunity" prevents a large flu outbreak in the region. For the past six weeks, the infection control nurses at the hospital have administered about 700 flu shots to people in the community.

The biggest attraction at the Health Fair was Nolan, the Colon – a 209-pound inflatable, walk-through colon. Amie Haakenson with the Alaska Native Health Consortium, dressed as a red polyp, educated people on the risk factors that could lead to colorectal cancer: tobacco use, poor dietary choices and not enough exercise. Also, people with a family history of colon cancer should be screened starting at age 50.

After having done the rounds and collected answers for the quiz, people could collect their prizes at the Emerald City station, where the journey through the wonderful world of wellness ended.

Thanksgiving and the four levels of happiness

FAMILY

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Thanksgiving may be good for you, especially if the holiday gives you a reason to experience real happiness.

"Happiness," the term used by ancient philosophers to describe mental well being, is an important part of overall health. And while there are many aspects of Thanksgiving that are unhealthy from a dietary point-of-view, the Thanksgiving holiday may be good for our mental health because it provides one of the best opportunities to experience higher levels of happiness.

There are basically four levels of happiness according to Robert Spitzer, philosopher, theologian, and former president of Gonzaga University.

It is interesting to think of these levels as they apply to the Thanksgiving holiday.

Level one: happiness in an object or feeling. This is the part of Thanksgiving most associated with the meal itself. "The food looks good." "I eat the food." "I feel happy." This form of happiness is short-lived and most prone to leading to a basic form of unhappiness. "I ate too much." "My stomach is unhappy." or "I feel guilty for eating too much." For this reason, Thanksgiving can be an unhealthy holiday for those who are merely pursuing this first level of happiness.

Level two: happiness by comparison. This form of happiness comes from winning a competition. During the holidays, it is often associated with shopping or sporting events. "I got a great price on this turkey." "I caught the biggest goose." Or "My team won the game." But seeking happiness of this sort often leads to a second level of unhappiness. "I miss being with family," or "I cannot afford a nice meal." Thanksgiving can be difficult, and a mentally unhealthy time, for people who healthy time, for people who are reminded of something lost or plans that have failed.

DOCTOR have a profound impact on overall health. A Mayo Clinic study published in 2000 showed that pessimistic thinking increases a person's risk of death from any cause by nearly 20 percent.

Level three: happiness through helping others. Many people find satisfaction in providing for others during the holidays: "I cooked a meal;" "I see people are happy eating the meal;" "Therefore, I am happy." Communities, families, and organizations are healthier when individuals pursue this third level of happiness because it is focused on service.

Research shows that whether the motive is altruism, religious conviction, tradition, or even compulsion, charitable giving and its counterpart volunteering, which are both so much a part of the holiday season, are consistently associated with improved health.

Helping others has been shown to strengthen the immune system and boost endorphins, the body's natural pain-killers, and the social interactions associated with volunteering have long been recognized as having a protective effect on the cardiovascular system.

A study of elderly persons in California published in the Journal of Health Psychology in 1999 showed that regular volunteers lowered their risk of death by 63 percent. A similar study out of Michigan in the early 1990s suggested that doing volunteer work increased life expectancy more than any other activity.

There is also an intrinsic reward to pursuing happiness by giving. According to a study published in the journal Science in 2007, charitable giving excites the same area of the brain known to process other pleasurable behaviors like eating food, tasting chocolate, sitting with a friend, or receiving gifts.

But even this more noble level of happiness has a limit. People cannot provide all the needs of others, and this can lead to a higher form of unhappiness. "I cannot feel happy when I still see others in need."

Level four: happiness in experiencing the sublime. This is the part of Thanksgiving, and similar holidays, experienced when a person feels a desire to be thankful without necessarily knowing whom to thank. It is the inescapable recognition of things that are beautiful, true, lovely and good.

Herein lies the one aspect of the Thanksgiving holiday that may be good for you: recognizing a blessing and being thankful.

Research suggests that the benefit of gratitude may outweigh the risk of any other aspect of holiday feasting.

"Thousands of years of literature talk about the benefits of cultivating gratefulness as a virtue," says University of California Davis psychology professor Robert Emmons.

Dr. Emmons is a leading researcher in a field of positive psychology that investigates the effects of optimism on a person's health. He states, "Research is beginning to suggest that feelings of thankfulness have tremendous positive value in helping people cope with daily problems, especially stress."

Gratitude is a form of optimism. Optimistic people generally have better health outcomes. They are known to have a stronger immune system. They recover faster from serious illness. They have lower rates of cardiovascular disease. They cope better with mental stress and have lower levels of depression. Some research even shows that positive people live longer.

To be clear, exercise during the holidays is still important. And I encourage you to go heavy on the vegetables and light on the gravy. Savor the desserts, but consider half-portions. Limit the butter. Eat whole grains. Stop smoking. By all means be healthy.

But remember that Thanksgiving is about something more important than mere physical health. It is a time, traditionally following the harvest, when Americans pause with family and friends to reflect on things in our life that are good, pure, lovely, admirable, excellent, or worthy of praise, and by doing so we reach for the highest and most healthy form of happiness.

Gratitude is a part of a well-rounded healthy life. If I have a prescriptive recommendation for you this season it is this: when sitting around the table this holiday, take time to be thankful.

Dwayne Lloyd Johnson Jr.

On behalf of the family of Dwayne Lloyd Johnson Jr, we would like to express our sincere gratitude for all the generous support, encouraging words, and thoughts and prayers during this sad time. A special heartfelt thanks to Pastor Joel Oyoumick, Linda Towarak, Gary Eckenweiler, LA Commack, and all the family and friends. We are so grateful for all you have done. The cards, letters, prayers, food and visits meant a great deal to us as we struggle with our heartbreaking loss. prehensive animal control ordinances. As the Police Department has been recently tasked with animal control, I am in the process of structuring our resources to provide for effective enforcement. Officers and Community Services Officers will be actively patrolling and taking 'animals at large' into custody. We will be actively enforcing the full scope of animal control regulations. And though this additional duty will make it a bit more difficult to respond to all calls in a timely manner, it may prevent the next dog bite incident or something worse.

Obviously the most desirable outcome is for all pet owners (or petparents per se) to follow the ordinances: license and secure your pet; clean up after it; keep it out of the areas where pets are prohibited (parks and play grounds); and if your animal does come into our custody—come and reclaim it. Being a responsible pet owner can be hard sometimes, but it is one of the many things that is required if you choose to have a pet.

Service director of Environmental Health and Engineering Rear Admiral Gary Hartz to join her to cut the blue ribbon to ceremonially open the facility.

Hartz delivered a short speech saying that not only is this health care facility designed and built to deliver health care to regional residents, but it is also good for the local economy by providing more jobs and more money for the community. Hartz also thanked other partners involved in building the hospital, the State of Alaska, the City of Nome, Nome Joint Utilities and the collaboration between all and the board.

And then the blue ribbon was cut and fell to the cheers of all.

Catholic priest Rev. Ross Tozzi blessed the building and sprinkled the audience as well as the facility with holy water.

Community United Methodist Church pastor Julie Yoder Elmore invoked the spirit to bless the doctors, physicians and nurses, health aides and staff to serve this community with wisdom and love. She prayed for healing that may come from this place.

Lutheran Church Rev. Karen Sonray touched on a different aspect. She prayed for the families that will be losing loved ones in the hospital, as it is in its nature that it's a passing place or a gateway. May the love of God bless and comfort us and gently wipe away their tears. "We ask that you grant whose life ends a kindly welcome and release of burdens life and entry into everlasting life," Sonray prayed.

After the blessing, the crowd moved out of the wind and inside the facility. The soft afternoon rays of sun streamed in through the big triple-pane windows, bathing the King Island Dancers and Drummers in warm light as they were welcoming the crowd. The Nome Beltz JROTC presented the colors and the Nome-Beltz Choir directed by Ron Horner sang the National Anthem and the Alaska Flag Song.

Before more speeches were held, Emily Hughes recognized village health aides who have been working for NSHC for more than 20 years.

Then, the audience heard from former aide to the late U.S. Senator Ted Stevens, Liz Connell; Rep. Neal Foster, Senator Donny Olson, Bob Walsh from Sen. Lisa Murkowski's office and IHS Anchorage officer Chris Mandregan.

DOWL program manager Jay Farmwald described the Nome Hospital Project as "exciting" and "challenging" at the same time. "The tricky part was to get the funding," Farmwald said. But being at the right stage at the right time, the project qualified for federal stimulus dollars. Only one other hospital in the nation, in South Dakota, qualified for stimulus funds. Farmwald also said that it was a technically complicated project to build a first class facility in the sub-arctic on melting permafrost and having to have all materials shipped in by barge. It took 2,000 tons of steel to construct the structural frame for the building and it took 100 tractor-trailers to transport this steel from Montana to the dock in Seattle.

The main contractor was a joint venture between the Bering Straits Native Corporation's Inuit Services and Neeser Construction. About 21 subcontractors worked on the hospital at its different stages.

Staff will be slowly moving into the new facility starting on Nov. 28 through Dec. 7 with the departments of finance, administration, human resources, Women Infant and Children, the CAMP department, Infant Learning, audiology, Village Health Services, Eye Care and the Dental departments. Then follows the move of the Materials Management Office and Central Supply. The last departments to move are Primary Care and Inpatient, completing the move in the last week of January.

Park Service drafts master plan for Serpentine Hot Springs

By Diana Haecker

The National Park Service held a public meeting on Monday with the purpose to collect input for a master plan for Serpentine Hot Springs. Park Superintendent Jeannette Pomrenke said that a master plan for the springs never existed but was mandated in the 1986 management plan for the Bering Land Bridge National Preserve. Pomrenke explained that the plan would spell out the use of the area, how much or how little development should take place and give an overall direction of how to manage the area.

The master plan would be for an area of 28,000 acres around the Iyat Hot Springs site where currently a bathhouse and a bunk house sit. A short airstrip provides access via small fixed wing aircraft. All other trails that lead to Iyat from the Kougarok Road or Shishmaref don't allow for motorized vehicles in the summer - it's fly-in, walk-in or bikein only - or by snowmachine in the

With this, transportation was one of the first questions that Park managers asked in relation to coming up with a master plan. NPS has finished a transportation study that plays out different scenarios of developing access to Serpentine Hot Springs, with a price tag attached. One of the alternatives calls for the development of a road from the Nome-Taylor highway to Serpentine at a cost of $41 million. Other alternatives include improving the airstrip, increasing the number of trail markers on the trails to Shishmaref and the Nome-Taylor Highway and adding an entrance marker to mark the entrance of the Preserve's boundary.

What people want to see improved

There was agreement that the bunkhouse and bathhouse needs repairs and maybe even replacement. Over the years, visitors left their marks, signatures and even small paintings on the walls of the bunkhouse, which add to the character of the structure. "People have really strong feelings about Serpetine Hot Springs," said Pomrenke. "Once you go there, you feel an overwhelming sense of place. It's a place for friends and family and sharing."

People from Shishmaref especially have a strong connection and consider Iyat a healing place. Pomrenke said that the message she heard during a recent meeting in Shishmaref and also from previous

Angie Gorn new Norton Sound CEO

By Diana Haecker

On Monday, the Norton Sound Health Corporation announced that interim CEO and President Angie Gorn has been appointed to fill the positions permanently.

The appointment was effective Nov. 21.

The top job at the regional health corporation became vacant when Deven Parlikar resigned in mid-October. Parlikar was with NSHC for 11 months. After his resignation, the board of directors appointed Angie Gorn the interim CEO.

The search for a new leader after Parlikar left Nome began in-house. According to NSHC spokeswoman Monica Watchman, the NSHC Board of Directors first looked within the tribal health organization "to ensure there was stable leadership for the upcoming challenge and opportunity" that the move into the newly built hospital facility brings.

"Angie Gorn has been here, she has the knowledge and know-how, especially because of her active role within Nome," Watchman wrote in an email to The Nome Nugget.

Announcing a new CEO and President comes at a crucial time in the health corporation's history.

Just last week, the new regional hospital building was ceremonially opened with a ribbon-cutting.

Hospital departments are preparing to move into the new facility. The move is expected to be complete in late January.

Nome celebrates National Native Heritage month with feast and dance at the Nome Rec Center

By Diana Haecker

Last Saturday, the Rec Center was venue to the first major celebration in Nome honoring November as National Native American Heritage Month. The celebration started with a walk through town and continued with a huge potluck feast of fish, reindeer stew, Eskimo salad and an assortment of cakes.

After the crowd of at least 300 people were fed, the Inupiaq Choir sang for the audience. Then came an evening filled with dancing. First, the Nome-Beltz High School dance group performed, followed by the King Island and Little Diomede singers and dancers.

The event was called "Kaatiluta" and, according to Sallaffie, it means 'all of us together' in the King Island dialect of Inupiat.

"Nome has such a large and diverse Native Alaskan population we're from all over the place in the Bering Strait region," said Sallaffie.
"We wanted the theme to reflect unity and that it represents all of our diverse Native communities.'

The entire community was invited to participate in the joyful event.

Many local businesses and organizations helped by donating door prizes for the Elders, by serving food, setting up chairs or by cleaning up after the event.

President Barack Obama proclaimed November 2011 as National Native American Heritage Month. In a resolution, Obama called upon all Americans to commemorate this month with appropriate programs and activities.

After Nov. 2011 came and left without any special celebration in Nome, Sallaffie said she was

"bummed" that despite the large and no event had been planned to celediverse Native community in Nome, brate their cultures.

So she changed that. As part of continued on page 8

Letters -

Dear Nancy,

Our tax code is rife with exemptions, credits, special preferences, incentives, and loopholes, most carefully crafted and steered through the legislative process by a bevy of highly skilled lobbyists who are well-bankrolled by one corporatist interest or another. The purpose of these "improvements" to the income tax law is to benefit that particular corporatist interest, either directly by providing some sort of tax relief or indirectly by encouraging otherwise irrational behavior by other taxpayers that boosts the fortunes of the corporatist. About half the lobbyists on Capitol Hill are engaged in tax code work, which means a lot of money is flowing. And we are not just talking campaign contributions. Legislators and staff who play ball with respect to tax code "improvements" certainly tend to get special consideration for lobbyist, legal firm, and board of director sinecures after retiring from government serv-

Whereas individuals struggle with incredibly complex tax returns each year and the hassles of coping with and complying with the arcane rules constrict small businesses that can barely afford to pay accountants to help with compliance.

Our current income tax creates a disincentive for people to be as productive as they can be and maximize their income? Isn't the intent of maximizing profit a prerequisite for growth?

The answer is that we have to look beyond a laundry list of marginal tinkerings with our current tax code such as been recently proposed. It is time for our president to start looking to make a positive difference.

He needs a solution that would galvanize instant support from virtually every small business and be greeted enthusiastically by middleto-upper bracket while providing the prospect of lots of new jobs to unand underemployed folks? And would both eliminate the loopholes now on the books and prevent any new ones from being created?

The solution is a simple one: Eliminate all income taxes — personal (including estate) and corpodisband the IRS, and implement a revenue-neutral consumption tax. The tax would be collected on the sale of services and new products to individuals (not on business-to-business sales or the resale of used products to individuals).

There need be only one basic exemption: for folks near and below the poverty line. The process would be to initiate the tax after a certain base of X dollars. Poor folk would pay no tax. But for richer folks, the more you buy, the more you pay.

This would be a huge boon to our economy. U.S.-based producers could price their products cheaper, not having to account for the cost of the income tax, and thereby gain a competitive advantage against imported goods and in the export markets. It would make more economic sense to produce goods in the USA again, and we'd gain jobs... lots of

strengthen such privately owned businesses. Retailers would gain sales, consumers will have their entire paychecks to spend. Producers will no longer have to "price in" the cost of their own corporate income taxes, so they can afford to charge

But big businesses that benefit from the competitive moat afforded them by the income tax code would fight it with all their lobbying power. Tax lawyers and accountants would generally be unhappy considering their prospect of job loss. And legislators would be loath to surrender the power — and attendant remuneration of being able to dispense favors to the rich and powerful.

But if President Obama is looking for a signature issue that would enable him to bring together a strong coalition of both have and have-not citizens, all of whom would benefit from this solution, demonstrate that the government will not favor corporatist interests over those of the public at large, and increase the odds he can deliver on his 12-million-newjobs promise, he could scarcely do

Should he do this, Mr. Obama can build himself a lasting legacy of accomplishment that will ensure the gratitude of future generations.

It is time for Mr. Obama to make a change that truly makes a difference. Louis A Murphy, Nome, AK

Celebrate for a Good Cause

It's carnival time in Nome - a time to celebrate and give thanks for all of our community volunteer organizations. The Firemen's Carnival is an annual event where the residents of Nome and the surrounding communities have a chance to pitch in and fund our volunteers. Remember, these are the folks who jump out of their warm beds and into their boots to rescue us in the wee hours of the morning. The cost of gear, training and supplies is offset by the funds generated by this car-

The Firemen's Carnival not only raises money for the Volunteer Fire Department but also for many of Nome's charitable and volunteer organizations that take part in the event. All of these organizations contribute their time and skills to make Nome a better community.

So, Nomeites and neighbors, please plan an evening of fun, where everyone is a winner. We can reach into our wallets and know that our donations are going to a cause for which we can all be proud to have working for us and our community. Go to the Firemen's Carnival Saturday night and have fun. - N.L.M.-

New fabric business caters to crafters, knitters and seamstresses

By Diana Haecker

Last Friday Kim Galleher opened the doors to her newly renovated store, the Whimsy Shop at 404 West Tobuk Alley.

After months of remodeling the small 350 square foot building, Black Friday was the day for the shop's grand opening. Nome's sewers, crafters and knitters came to see what the store holds. The friendly and cozy shop was just finished a week prior to the grand opening. Most of the renovations were done by Kim's husband Blaine Galleher, who works full time at the Alaska Dept. of Transportation.

Kim Galleher said that her previous store space was only one-third of the size. "It was actually a section of my husband's workshop that he let me use," Galleher said. She said that the Whimsy Shop started out as a small gift store in May 2010. More and more customers asked for fabrics, sewing and crafting supplies and Galleher recognized the unfilled need for Nome sewers. Although she doesn't describe herself as an avid sewer, Galleher said her mother has been a very good seamstress and she grew up around fabrics. "I've always been around it and I love the fabrics and the trims," Galleher said.

By trade, Galleher is a social worker. She has earned a masters degree in social work and has been working in her field for over 20 years. Opening the Whimsy Shop marks a career change that will now take her on the journey of becoming a small business owner.

A business plan writing class, she said, helped her to become focused on what the Whimsy Shop should be. With the business plan in hand and input from Kawerak's business planning specialist Alice Bioff, Galleher entered the Norton Sound Economic Development Small Business Initiative competition and was awarded a $20,000 grant to kick-start her new endeavor. She said she put the money to use to fin-

Angie Gorn was born and raised in Wisconsin, where she also received her Bachelor of Science in Dietetics at the University of Wisconsin in Madison. She received a Masters of Business Administration in Healthcare Administration degree from the University of Wisconsin at Concordia and then came to Nome in 1997. Gorn began her career as the director of the CAMP department, which aims at diabetes prevention and chronic care, and began the award-winning "Summercise" program.

A press release from NSHC lists Gorn's many achievements of improving health care in the region. Among other things, she was instrumental in having Quyanna Care recognized as one of the 39 best nursing homes nationwide and for having promoted healthcare career education in Nome. Gorn was responsible for writing several grants that brought $7 million to the health corporation, most recently a $1 million telemedicine grant.

Gorn was the Vice President of Hospital Services and Nursing Home administrator for the last seven years.

The board of directors have committed to a five-year term contract with Gorn.

Gorn is married to Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game area biology director Tony Gorn. They have two children: Colton, 7, and Taylor, 5.

ish the renovation of her shop.

The store holds a wide assortment of fabrics and yarns and also needles, threads, buttons, zippers, and scissors. Galleher stocks satin for casket lining and she always has a big roll of parka lining, corduroy and fleece.

But that's not all. "I'll be starting to develop a website where people from the villages can go online, see what's in my store and order it online," Galleher said. She plans to travel to the outlying communities to introduce the webstore and to show people how to order online. In addition, the webstore could hold a catalog of kuskpuks, hats, mittens and other garments where people who are not gifted sewers can order custom made items from materials bought at the Whimsy Shop and put together by a seamstress who's up to the task.

Galleher also toys with the idea of hosting crafting workshops where people teach their craft or projects for a couple of hours. She said it inspires her to see younger girls come in and shop for their first attempts at sewing or knitting.

Galleher said since her family still comes first – and until she hires a part time employee – she is open only Mondays and Thursdays from 4 p.m. until 7 p.m., Saturday's from noon to 4 p.m.

Fisheries observer program changes

The National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration, Fisheries last week announced that they are going to implement a new fisheries observer program for Alaska's commercial groundfish and halibut fisheries beginning January 1, 2013.

The program applies to vessels and processors of all sizes, including the commercial halibut sector. It divides the existing observer program into two observer coverage categories: full coverage and partial coverage. Things won't change for vessels and processors in the full observer coverage category. They still are required to have at least one observer on board at all times and will continue to contract directly with observer provider companies and pay the full cost of their own observer coverage.

What changes are rules for vessels and processors in the partial observer coverage category, which are not required to have a full time observer on board. They pay a fee for their observer coverage based on the ex-vessel value of their groundfish and halibut. The fee for each landing will be split between vessel owners and processors with processors remitting the fee liability to NOAA Fisheries through an annual billing. NOAA Fisheries is providing startup funding for the first year of the new program. The fees collected from industry will fund the program in subsequent years.

Observers are trained biologists who collect detailed biological and operational information while aboard vessels and at shoreside plants during commercial fisheries. Fisheries managers, scientists and policymakers use the information to make decisions to manage Alaska's billion-dollar fisheries industry sustainably.

Mixed Six volleyball tourney heads to White Mountain

By Jeff Erickson

The Western Conference Mixed Six volleyball tournament, held November 29 to December 1, will bring teams from across Norton Sound to White Mountain to spike it out for two berths at the State Tournament in Anchorage, held December 6-8.

As the regular season finished it was apparent that the Unalakleet Wolfpack would be the top contender with a season record of 22-0. Their powerful offensive attack led by senior hitters Stuart Towarak and Colin Corsetti and a very deep and strong roster, has left everyone (including defending state champion Glacier View) in the rear view mirror.

The rest of the teams won't let them have it though. With two spots available, the battles will commence on Thursday night. With a logjam of very solid teams, expectations are high. Both Teller and White Mountain have had good seasons and play exceptional defense and serve well. Perennial top contenders, the Golovin Lynx, have struggled some with their roster but will come to the tournament as strong as they've been all season. Each team will bring their best and fans can expect to see some high quality volleyball performances.

USGS study finds changes in walrus behavior due to loss of Arctic sea ice Sparse summer sea ice in the Arctic over the past five years has caused behavioral changes in Pacific walruses according to research published by U.S. Geological Survey and Russian scientists. The effects on the walrus population are unknown

"The loss of sea ice is the 'why' for the change in walrus behavior; the tracking data tells us the 'where' in terms of their new forage patterns," said USGS Director Marcia McNutt. "What awaits to be seen is how much will it matter?"

Using a simple darting system, scientists attached radio-tracking tags to 251 walruses in the Chukchi Sea. The tags transmitted the animals' whereabouts and whether they were in the water and feeding. Using the tagging data gathered from 2008-2011, scientists created detailed maps of the walruses' seasonal movements and feeding patterns relative to the location and amount of sea ice.

The study found that due to earlier melting of the ice in the summer, walruses arrived earlier to their northern feeding grounds on the broad continental shelf of the Chukchi Sea. When the sea ice over the continental shelf melted completely in the fall, they "hauled out" onshore in large aggregations and foraged for food closer to shore.

The specific effects of these behavioral changes are not yet understood, scientists said in a recent press conference in Anchorage. It is known that while onshore, young walruses are susceptible to mortality from trampling. Additionally, hauling out onshore and using nearshore feeding areas may require more energy.

The longer open water season in the Arctic is creating opportunities for shipping, tourism, energy production and other human activities in the remote region. Data from this study will provide resource managers with basic information on areas important for walruses, such as the Hanna Shoal region, as human activities in the Arctic increase. The areas of walrus foraging overlap with oil and gas lease blocks administered by BOEM.

The Arctic sea ice is melting faster than forecasted by many of the top climate models: the first ice free summer is now predicted to occur by 2035, perhaps as soon as 2025.

An assortment of gloves and masks were placed before the drummers with both King Island and Little Diomede dance groups. How to prevent or hold off the growing threat of cancer

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Does it seem like more people are getting cancer in recent years? According to the American Cancer Society this may be more than just a perception. Cancer is now the second leading cause of death in the United States, just behind cardiovascular disease, accounting for around 1,500 deaths daily. In fact one of every four deaths in the U.S. is now tied to some form of cancer.

The World

Health Organization reports that lung cancer, stomach cancer, liver cancer, colon cancer, and breast cancer top the list of killers worldwide.

The trend is seen most clearly in developing regions where cancer now affects more people than the historical killers of HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria combined.

This rise in cancer rates seems to be an unintended consequence of good health policy. People are living longer due to a reduction in infectious diseases, but they are not necessarily living healthier. Much of the increase in cancers worldwide is directly related to what doctors call "modifiable risk factors" such as tobacco use, physical inactivity, and calorie-dense, nutrientpoor dietary habits.

Cancer is caused by exposure to harmful substances that induce a change in the DNA of a single cell. Normally these defective cells are destroyed or self-destruct before they become tumors because of a complex system of checks in the human immune system designed to automatically fight off cancer.

In fact, cancer cells are probably forming in our bodies everyday, but they do not grow into full cancers because each cell has a spellchecker of sorts that monitors the DNA and sends a signal for the cell to self-destruct if the cell's DNA is copied incorrectly. If the spellchecker fails, a brake pedal gene keeps the cell from rapidly dividing and causing a tumor to form. Still another gene acts like a kill-switch to stop the cell from dividing if it is not forming correctly.

When these protection measures malfunction, a cancer is allowed to form into a tumor. For example, a mutation within a cell of the colon lining leads to colon cancer or a loss of a protective gene in a breast cell will lead to breast cancer.

Doctors recognize three main causes of cancer called carcinogens: physical carcinogens, like radiation exposure or sunburns; chemical carcinogens, as in tobacco smoke or asbestos insulation; and biologic carcinogens, like the hepatitis virus, the human papilloma virus (HPV), the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) or the Helicobactor pylori bacteria.

People are often surprised to learn that infections can cause cancer. The percentage of cancers attributed to chronic infections worldwide is around 26 percent in developing nations and 8 percent in developed regions of the world.

Many people are concerned that exposure to old military and mining waste chemicals increases the risk of cancer. Researchers do not yet know the extent to which chemical exposures increase cancer risk for rural Alaskans: however, there is strong evidence that the risk of cancer increases exponentially when two risk factors are combined. For example, the risk of lung cancer in someone exposed to asbestos is very high if the person is also a smoker.

According to the American Cancer Society there are four priorities for preventing cancers.

First, stop smoking and discontinue other forms of tobacco use. Tobacco is the single largest preventable cause of cancer and premature death. Experts have identified at least 15 different types of cancer directly related to smoking. Over 80 percent of these cancers involve the lung or airways, though smoking also increases the risk for bladder. kidney, and pancreatic cancer.

In the Norton Sound region, 2 out of every 3 people are current smokers, with an even higher rate of peocontinued on page 11

The word of God tells us:

"But he that endures to the end shall be saved." (Matthew 10:22)
"Be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus. . . endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." (2 Timothy 2:1&3)

Sometimes when the going gets tough, it helps to consider holding on for just one more day. I sometimes find that if I try to look too far ahead concerning the things I must do or deal with in the week, the month or even the year, I may be overcome with the enormity of it all. So, instead of allowing myself to become overwhelmed or discouraged, I choose to just look at what each day requires of me. I try not to allow myself to live out tomorrow before it gets here. I encourage you to take the time to read Matthew 6:25-34 concerning the Lord's thoughts concerning worrying about tomorrow, or anything else for that matter. The 34th verse of that passage says: "Therefore do not worry about tomorrow, for tomorrow will worry about itself. Each day has enough trouble of its own."

So my friend, if you're having a tough time, if you feel as though you're at the end of your rope, hang in there! Tie a knot in the rope and hold on! Don't give up! Don't allow yourself to be overwhelmed! Take the moment and turn it into an opportunity to grow and develop your strength in the Lord! Should the days ahead seem to be filled with things that might come against you or challenge you, remember this; "Greater is he who is in you, than he who is in the world!" (1 John 4:4).

Take each day as it comes and know that the Lord God of All Creation, is with you and he will see you through, regardless of the challenges you face! Turn to the Lord for your strength and he will lift you up! I close with this word from the Lord.

"Being confident of this, that he who began a good work in you will carry it on to completion until the day of Christ Jesus!" (Philippians 1:6).

May his strength be yours as you place your hope and your trust in him! Blessings to you!

Threat of Cancer

ple exposed to secondhand smoke. Unless this trend changes drastically, the burden of cancer in rural Alaska will become one of the highest globally

Second, manage weight and increase physical activity. Obesity, defined as a BMI above 30, is associated with an increase in breast, uterine, colon, and kidney cancers.

Third, avoid preventable infectious diseases known to cause cancer. Chronic Hepatitis B and Hepatitis C infections are associated with 75 percent of liver cancers. The human papilloma virus (HPV) is the leading cause of cancers of the cervix and uterus. A vaccine is available to prevent infections with both Hepatitis B and the more virulent forms of HPV.

Avoid risk behaviors, including multiple sex partners and needle sharing (including tattoo needle sharing). This is the only way to prevent alternate forms of HPV, all strains of HIV, and hepatitis C, for which there is no vaccine.

Fourth, keep up with screening. When prevention fails, screening exams provide the best chance for early detection. Pap smears, colonoscopies, mammograms, and prostate exams are all designed to catch cancers in their earliest and most treatable stages.

As one generation learns more about how to prevent cancer, it is imperative they leave a legacy for their children by instilling in them healthy behaviors that lead them away from this destructive disease.

Chief's Notes

By John Papasodora, chief Nome Police Department

Another holiday has passed us by and I sincerely hope that everyone enjoyed a wonderful day of Thanksgiving. There are many things to be thankful for. I extend my thanks to the community for the support they have given the police department. It makes it much easier to do the job when the community is engaged in helping keep our city safe.

When I went to the ice rink to skate with my daughter the other night, I found out about the kids who were throwing pucks out of the ice rink and towards one of the residents who lives nearby. From the briefing I received, the man was nearly hit in the head with a puck. Having been struck by my share of hockey pucks, I know this is a very unpleasant experience. The officers did what they were supposed to do and informed the parents of these misguided youths the tale of their misfortune. I hope that the parents took this opportunity to impress on their children the danger associated with throwing pucks as a hard chunk of rubber can cause significant injury. Also as a result, the hockey pucks and sticks are no longer available for kids to use. As the old saying goes, "It only takes one to ruin the fun for all."

Issues with our youth seem to stand out when reviewing what has been occurring of late. The number of cases of Minor in Possession of Tobacco is staggering and I keep asking myself, 'Where do these kids get their hands on tobacco?' The obvious answer is that they either steal it or pilfer it from home. Some may have adults who purchase it for them, but as yet, the youths we have been in contact with haven't indicated there is a syndicate of dealers standing near the school enticing young people to sample their products. Most kids are caught with chew and I believe that most think it is harmless and a status symbol. But I'm sure Danielle Sylvester could educate them about the health hazards - though when you're 10 or 11, those hazards really don't mean much. Once again, it is the parents in our community that have to take the lead. Think about the modeling behaviors that you offer your children and the children around you. It could make a difference.

ages 11 and 12, were caught with a tin of marijuana at the Elementary School gives one pause. When I was that age, I didn't even know what marijuana was - let alone contemplate taking it to school. I wonder where these kids saw the behavior that made them think this is OK...was it from a parent, or brother, or some other person that they look up to? I talked to the officer who handled this case and the kids were stalwart in their silence as to the source of the marijuana.

These particular cases bring to light the fact that some of the youth of today are engaging in activities that are not only dangerous, but also increasing in frequency and severity. Youths who engage in risk taking behavior when they are young are at increased risk for sexual victimization, chemical dependence, long-term health issues and perhaps a lifetime of misery brought about by poor life choices. The question persists, "Where do kids learn these behaviors?" but more importantly, "How do we change them?"

The answer clearly rests with the community. The children in our city are getting tobacco and marijuana from any number of sources. Though your police officers would love to be in all places at all times, the reality is that we can only handle one incident at a time. While we are dealing with the incapacitated intoxicated inebriate, all sorts of mischief can be happening. And though the media release for this week shows a good amount of activity, what is posted in the Seawall is only a small portion of what we do. That means that we need vour help.

We need the community to provide the information that will allow us to attach consequences to behaviors. If you see someone providing tobacco to a minor, then let us know. If you know of people who are providing drugs, then give us a call. The more information that we have to work with, the better we can interdict these problems. As a community, Nome should be angry that our youth is engaging in these activities. Express your dissatisfaction and pick up the phone. One phone call could make a difference in a child's future.

The Nome Police are committed to serving the needs of the community. We are here to listen to your concerns. If you have an issue or want to provide information, you can call the Crime Line at 443-8509 and report anonymously or call 443-5262. All of us working together can make a difference.

continued from page 1 meetings in Nome, was that people wanted to see some improvements but unanimous consent was: "Don't change the character of the place." Pomrenke said that approximately 58 people participated in the Shishmaref meeting. In Nome, only five people showed up and the main questions asked regarded the maintenance or improvement of the airstrip.

Proposed actions

The scale of proposed alternatives ranges from a no-action alternative to Alternative D with rather significant changes and additions to the existing infrastructure of Serpentine Hot Springs.

Alternative B would replace existing bunkhouse with a new building, there would be minimal Park Service presence and it would continue to be "highly informal." However, it would see some improvements to restroom facilities, but it's not determined yet what kind of toilet would be best to use.

Alternative C would replace the existing bunkhouse with a new one in a new location near the airstrip. The airstrip would be extended and restrooms would be improved. The bathhouse would be replaced in-kind and in place and a changing room would be added.

Alternative D proposes the most changes. Under this scenario, the airstrip would be lengthened and realigned; the bunkhouse would be replaced with a larger cabin to accommodate 10 more people and relocated near the airstrip. There would be camping areas, more and improved restrooms and a Park Service administrative structure would be constructed.

Pomrenke said that Shishmaref residents said they would hold another meeting to mull the alternatives and then get back with the Park Serv-

Alternative B, they found points in the other alternatives that they liked.

The budget to come up with the master plan is $238,000 total over a time span of three years. The planning timetable puts planners at the step where the draft alternatives are presented to the public. The next steps are to incorporate public comments, draft the plan and environmental assessment and release the plan after spring 2013.

Although notifications put the deadline for public comment on Nov. 30, NPS officials are still soliciting public input past that date.

The Nome LEPC is presenting government agencies and private entities in the Bering Straits Region with information related to Tier II reporting requirements. This is in accordance with federal regulations in Title III of the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act of 1986, Section 312, Public Law 99499, codified at 42 U.S.C. Section 11022. The Act is also known as SARA Title III.

Annual Tier II reports are required by organizations that maintain a physical inventory of applicable hazardous chemicals in quantities that are equal to or exceed threshold limits. Some organizations are exempt from reporting requirements per SARA Title III. or other federal regulations. All organizations are exempt for inventory below threshold limits.

Tier II reporting provides specific information to the public, local government (including the Fire Department), and state government, about hazardous chemicals present at your facility at any time during the year. Complete reporting includes submitting a copy of the Materials Safety Data Sheet (MSDS) for all chemicals that meet threshold limits.

Your organization may receive a letter in the next few weeks. Detailed information and instructions will be included in the packet. If you do not receive a letter, please contact the Nome LEPC by calling (907)443-8522 or if you have any questions as to whether or not your organization may be required to submit annual inventory reports in accordance with the Act.

Council seeks public opinion on marauding foxes

By Sandra L. Medearis

A measure to allow trapping within city limits to reduce Nome's in-town fox population went back on the table Monday night to be considered again after public input.

While they agreed with the intent to reduce risk of fox-dealt injury and painful rabies treatments, most of the Nome Common Council considered the action too hasty to pass without careful consideration.

The Council a few years back outlawed trapping in certain areas after pets became ensnared with severe injuries from animal traps.

The City sought legal services in writing a resolution authorizing special permitting for the trapping of fur-bearing animals within otherwise prohibited areas of the City of Nome.

"I've seen more than normal, but we might be moving a little fast," Councilman Randy Pomeranz said.

"I don't want to see someone have to go through the rabies shots, but we did a lot of work a number of years ago when family pets were being caught"

If passed, the resolution would allow setting of traps for no longer than 30 days after a trapper obtained a trapping permit from the city clerk's office.

Language of the ordinance notes that a rise in the fox population has threatened public safety, indicating a need for trapping to be restored until rescinded by the Council in the area south of the Nome Bypass Road and Little Creek Road to Center Creek

No person could set more than 10 traps and none on private land without permission of the landowner.

The resolution forbids the use of body-gripping Conibear traps.

The resolution stemmed from a discussion among state Dept. of Fish and Game, Nome Police Dept. and City Manager Josie Bahnke, according to Tom Moran, city clerk.

Fox sightings worry Nome residents

By Diana Haecker

Although no reports of rabid foxes have been documented in Nome lately, an increase in sightings of red foxes roaming through downtown Nome have residents worried. They are seen in the alleys in downtown near Front Street. Nome Elementary School Principal Bob Grimes said that a parent reported to him that she saw three foxes near the school and that several children said they were "chased" by foxes on their way to school. Grimes said that a teacher had to kick a fox away from her when she was walking on Greg Kruschek Avenue near the new hospital. Grimes said that the school has now set up three live traps for foxes on school property.

Kevin Zweifel, director of Environmental Health at NSHC, the entity that investigates occurrences of rabies in the region, said that he has not had any reports of rabid foxes. "I have not heard of foxes making contact with dogs or people," Zweifel said. He added that his office is investigating fox encounters outside of Nome. "We've only been hearing anecdotally about the fox situation," Zweifel said.

Within city limits, the Nome Police Department is in charge of animal control, but not necessarily wildlife. Also, with the lack of an animal control officer, the task to deal with fox calls falls to NPD officers on duty. NPD dispatchers refer people calling in regards to foxes to the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game. Tony Gorn, ADF&G area biologist, said that he's more than happy to take calls regarding fox problems. Gorn echoed Zweifel, saying that the department did not get an unusually high call volume nor does the department monitor fox populations in

Regular passenger service connects Little Diomede

By Diana Haecker

Last week, an Evergreen helicopter took off from Nome not to deliver mail, but passengers to the island of Little Diomede. This marks the first time ever that Little Diomede sees regularly scheduled, year-around passenger service to and from the island.

And that means predictability to a certain degree. Flights are now only hampered by weather conditions that are often brutal on this island in the middle of the Bering Strait.

On the Web:

www.nomenugget.net E-mail:

nugget@nomenugget.com

At least residents of Little Diomede are not at the mercy of space availability to get on and off the island anymore, or have to wait until spring when an ice runway can be built for fixed wing aircraft to land. Until now, passengers could only hitch a ride on Evergreen's weekly Wednesday mail run that takes U.S. post, groceries and supplies to the island. This meant limited space in the four-seat twin-engine helicopter.

Getting off the island was somewhat easier than getting back on it when the helicopter with incoming Diomede flights is stuffed with mail and groceries. Sometimes Little Diomede residents trying to get home were stranded for weeks either in Wales or in Nome. But this has changed.

Starting with a rather un-ceremonial maiden flight on Monday, Nov. 26, Evergreen transported 12 passengers between Nome, Little Diomede and Wales.

Evergreen pilot Mike Maness said that he flies a route from Nome to Diomede, from Diomede to Wales, from Wales to Diomede and back to Nome. The service is provided on Mondays, weather permitting.

The price for a ticket between Nome and Diomede is $200 one way. Between Wales and Diomede passengers pay $100 one way.

This reflects a subsidized price structure.

Maness said that flights on the mail run on Wednesday are still available, albeit at a steeper rate: $400 for a one-way ticket between Nome and Little Diomede and $200 for a one way trip between Wales and Little Diomede.

After years of pushing for regularly scheduled passenger service, things finally worked out, but it wasn't an easy feat.

Kawerak Inc. has been lobbying on the state and federal level to connect the island in the middle of the Bering Strait with mainland Alaska. Under the federal Dept. of Transportation's Air Transportation to Non-eligible Places program, the feds supplied $200,000 matched by the Alaska Dept. of Commerce, Community and Economic Develop-

Dear Editor,

Alaskans have about $40 billion invested in our Permanent Fund. Dollars invested in businesses and nations throughout the world. Most believe dollars are wealth. In the end, dollars are only a tool used to help the people, prosper. Our dollars, created by the private Federal Reserve Bank are accepted around the globe. They are backed, by nothing more than the "good faith and credit" of the American people.

One day, the people of the world will no longer accept our dollars, simply on "good faith and credit." What happens to our Permanent Fund then? Do we actually own some tangible assets?

For decades now, Alaskans have begged our politicians to build an All-Alaska Gas-line. Every election season we hear the politicians tickle our ears, for hope, of a Gas-line. After their election we see no public campaigning for an All-Alaska Gasline, by those we elect. Only defeated proposals and delays.

It is time for the people to rattle our shackles of containment. Dollars have no intrinsic value. We need to take some of our dollars, out of the Permanent Fund, and invest it into infrastructure projects. Real assets with value to all people of Alaska.

With the dollars loss, as the worlds reserve currency, will come the collapse of our Permanent Fund. Taking dollars and turning them into an asset like the All-Alaska Gas-line will protect our investments for future generations, regardless of what happens to the all-mighty dollar.

We know what the politicians will do, delay, delay, delay. Will we demand an All-Alaska Gas-line as the previous generation did regarding our All-Alaska Oil-line?

We must recognize that true wealth of a nation is not in dollars but our productive capacity as a people. Let's turn some of our dollars into something of true value, a tangible asset we can sink our teeth into

The End is Nearer

The ancient Mayan calendar predicts that the world is to end sometime in December. But wait! The ancient Mayans have extended the deadline, but is it before or after we plummet off the fiscal cliff? Surely the Republicans hope it is before the rich have to pay higher taxes.

While the short-term challenges seem abysmal, the long-term issue of global warming has come into clear focus. We've been aware of the problem at least since 1988 and we have had time to find a solution, yet the time to fix the problem is getting more critical. The changes in global climate are obvious to those of us who live in the Arctic and witness our communities slide into the encroaching sea, and permafrost melting into methane-loaded mud. Our House of Representatives has gone stupid and refused to accept the basic science involved in global warming. Change and frequency of global warming increases the intensity of cyclones, droughts, floods and can have serious impact on our lives. It can destabilize governments, spark mass migration, famine, pandemics and military conflict.

Weather-related calamities in North America have caused an estimated $34 billion damages per year. The dimensions of the problems are humungous. We should have given a serious effort to solve global warming at least 25 years ago. But we didn't. Maybe the Mayan calendar will solve our problem if we don't crash over the fiscal cliff.

Dear Nancy,

I hear you might be missing me. Seems that Nome has a fox problem. Reports of Fox attacking a woman and her dog and possibly some kids have surfaced. For the past several years I have been snaring fox along the bypass road between The snow dump area and where I worked at the airport. I have caught anywhere from 20 to 40 fox per year doing this over the last several years. For a time another trapper was also catching similar numbers just north of where I was. You might remember the stink you and some others made at the city council a few years ago about snaring in city limits. Fortunately for the townsfolk, trapping remained legal in most of the city

As many know, I have moved to Fairbanks and the other trapper has not been active for a few years, partially thanks to the stink caused by those opposed to trapping in city limits. No sooner have I left than the fox are now a problem. I will point out for the entire time someone was trapping in city limits, you had few

"Why, in the midst of plenty, do Alaska's rural communities pay the highest energy prices in the nation?" This is the question asked by the Commonwealth North coalition established to identify solutions to the challenge of energy in remote Alaskan communities.

Today the economies of urban Alaska are in great peril while rural Alaskans face truly daunting obstacles. Small communities with minimal infrastructure rely on petroleum fuels for electricity, heat and transportation. Rural residents spend as much as half of their annual income on energy.

Ironically, Alaska's wealth emanates almost exclusively from rural Alaska – crude oil, mining and commercial fisheries being the mainstay. Trillions of cubic feet of natural gas lie untapped in the north, yet extracting and pro-

Shell oil spill gear fails in test

The Seattle radio station KUOW ran an investigative story on November 30, saying that a key test of underwater oil-spill equipment by Shell in Puget Sound in September was a "spectacular" failure. After the failed test of an oil spill containment dome, the federal Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement as well as Shell were not forthcoming about the test. The dome was supposed to act as an underwater vacuum cleaner in the event of a well blow-out. It would collect oil and funnel it to a tanker on the surface.

According to BSEE internal emails obtained by KUOW, the containment dome test experienced several days of mishaps, but on the fifth day, the test literally blew out of the water. KUOW reports that on a deadcalm Friday night in September, the head of BSEE's Alaska office Mark Fesmire watched the underwater video feed from the remote-control submarine when the video screen suddenly filled with bubbles. The 20foot-tall containment dome then shot to the surface. The massive white "breached like a whale," Fesmire e-mailed a colleague at BSEE headquarters. Then the dome sank but a safety buoy caught it before it hit the bottom. It took the crew of the Challenger 12 hours to get the dome back to the surface. The email from the BSEE said that "Basically the top half [of the containment dome] is crushed like a beer can."

Shell did not drill into potentially oil-bearing zones in either the Beaufort or Chukchi Seas this year. Before any drilling can occur, the containment system yet has to be fully tested and approved by BSEE and certified by the U.S. Coast Guard. Arctic voyages rise tenfold in two years

The number of vessels going through the Northern Sea Route jumped from four in 2010 to 34 in 2011 and then to 46 this year, with petroleum products making up the largest part of the cargo transported, according to Barents Observer. This year the total cargo transported on the route was 1.3 million tons, up 53 percent from last year, including

894,079 tons of diesel fuel, gas condensate, jet fuel, liquefied natural gas, and other petrol products. Some of the traffic goes through the Bering

Ship and Bunker news reports that Nordic Bulk Carriers A/S is in its third year using the Northern Sea Route along Russia's Arctic coast and has completed 10 journeys this year. Taking the NSR saved the company more than an estimated 40 percent of fuel costs than taking the Suez Canal route. According to Ship and Bunker, Nordic began using the NSR in 2010, becoming the first operator to do so, and it has increased the number of journeys on the route since then. Nordic uses the NSR to ship iron ore from northern Norway to China and its operations got a boost this year because it was able to carry more cargo on East-West trips as well. Nordic's managing director told Ship and Bunker that 2012 was the first time it has used four ships on the route, and it intends to do the same next year.

Coast Guard bill discussed in Congress

A revised Coast Guard reauthorization bill the House planed to vote on this week is aimed at settling major disputes over scrapping icebreaking ships, standards for what waste boats can dump and the operation of a coal-spewing ferry. The Congressional Quarterly reports.

House Democrats passed bill HR 2838 last fall that would have required the Coast Guard to decommission its only two heavy icebreakers in its fleet and set a national standard for what ships can release into open waters, trumping the Environmental Protection Agency's current rules. After the Senate sent the bill back to the House without either of those mandates in September, lawmakers have been working on a compromise.

During public comment period Paul Kosto of the Nome Volunteer Fire Department informed the Council that a $25,000 grant from Rasmussen Foundation sought by the Search and Rescue Dept. could use matching money from the City. He was planting "seeds for thought," he said. The Search and Rescue group wanted to upgrade search equipment and its command center, Kosto said. Search and Rescue members have to be members of NVFD. In some years, half the time donated by volunteer firefighters goes to Search and Rescue, according to Kosto.

The Council also received public comment from Mike Benchoff who has a tugboat stranded in the ice off the docking ramp by Port Road. Benchoff said unusually low water and lack of maintenance on the ramp impeded a timely removal by the Oct. 31 deadline.

The City, through Port of Nome, has been charging Benchoff $950 per day since Oct. 31 per the port tariff for not having his boat out of the harbor by the Oct. 31 deadline. Benchoff received a letter from the City concerning his boat last week as well as a meeting notice for the upcoming Dec. 6 Nome Port Commission meeting during which the panel was to discuss Benchoff and the Rustler.

Gravel spilled off the sides and ends of the ramp by overloading of barges had made the water shallower than indicated on the navigational charts provided by Port of Nome, Benchoff said, adding that he was not able to get his trailer under the boat before freeze-up Councilman Stan Andersen, acting mayor, told Benchoff to go through the Nome Port Commission and then log his issue with the Council if he received no satisfaction.

"I have my own opinion of what's going down," Andersen said. "I'd like to get something back from the port commission on how this is being addressed, in writing.

In other business the council:

• Received a letter from Jeanette Pomrenke noting a comment period from Nov. 12 to Dec. 12 on an environmental assessment in which the National Park Service is proposing to allow guided hunts within the Bering Land Bridge Reserve. Hunting operations have operated in the preserve, but expired over 20 years

· Approved fee waivers for uses of public facilities by two organizations-Nome Public Schools and Nome Volunteer Fire Dept. The Council waived fees of $1,625 for Nome Rec Center for the annual NVFD Carnival and $2,000 twice for high school basketball games with Kenai boys for Jan. 18 and 19 and with Mount Edgecumbe girls on Feb. 15 and 16.

• Awarded bids on a recent surplus vehicle sealed bid auction to the second-highest bidders after high bidders did not consummate the sales. A 2001 GMC MID bus went to Scott Rauk for a bid of $1,552 after Chick Trainor declined the vehicle after a bid of $2,650. Louie Green Jr., second highest bidder, won a 1995/1996 Arctic Cat 440 for $276 after Grant Wilkins bid $501, but did not claim the machine. Councilman Louis Green Sr. abstained from voting on the measure.

• Introduced ordinances granting City-owned land-use contracts with Kawerak, Inc., for Head Start and other children's services facilities. The measures will progress to second reading and final passage at the next regular Council meeting. Combined rent for leasing the two facilities after an increase consistent with the Consumer Price Index would come to approximately $8,500 per month.

• Received copies of liquor license renewal applications on behalf of Arctic Native Brotherhood and Nome Liquor Store.

November breaks record for low snowfall

By Diana Haecker

Around Thanksgiving, Nomeites can normally hear the sound of snowmachines zipping through town. Not this year. The Nome office of the National Weather Service confirmed that the region saw only 0.2 inches of snowfall, when the "normal" snowfall for November should be 12.1 inches. With this, November 2012 set a new low snowfall record for the books. In terms of precipitation - melted and then measured snow, Nov. 2012 saw only 0.02 inches, compared to the previous low of 0.03 inches set in 1939, 1962 and 2001.

"We are 11.9 inches off what's normal this year," said NWS metereologist Jerry Steiger on Tuesday.

The record high snowfall was November 1915 with 39 inches.

Steiger said the temperatures were with an average of 14.5°F a tad below the normal average, which for November is 16.9°F.

"November just saw mostly clear skies and cold temperatures, although we didn't break any daily records for low temperatures," said Steiger.

In other parts of Alaska, the lack of snow is also making headlines. Anchorage, the Mat-Su Valley as well as the Interior of Alaska experience an extended drought for snow.

or around Nome. "But this time of the year, every year, we get calls about foxes," Gorn said. Gorn said that people should not feed the animals, be it intentionally or unintentionally by leaving out trash. "Give them space, don't approach them, but if you encounter nuisance fox, call us," he said.

The police department has deployed live traps around town to catch foxes. The traps are nonlethally baited, the animal walks in and the cage shuts. Dogs, if accidentally caught, can be reunited with their owners and if foxes are caught, they will be put down.

Zweifel adds that people should avoid contact with foxes. "But if a fox appears to be acting strangely, either very aggressive or unusually docile, let somebody know that it can be dealt with," Zweifel said. In Nome, it would be the Nome Police Department, outside of Nome, it's Zweifel and his office of Environmental Health. If people shoot a fox that seems to be rabid, Zweifel sends the carcass in for testing. "If the fox is going to be tested, don't shoot it in the head," he said.

Nome Public Schools seek community input

By Diana Haecker

Last week's school board had a full agenda to tackle at its regular meeting on Tuesday: it heard the financial audit and annual review, had a discussion of a school climate and connectivity survey, heard an update on college and career pathways and also was asked to clarify a policy relating to past due lunch balances.

audit Financial passes

Two auditors with Mikunda, Cottrell & Co. presented their findings via Skype, to the school board. The auditors lauded the school board for having budgeted well and for not having any major discrepancies. Their report showed four findings that needed corrective actions. One financial statement finding shows problems with the internal control process over journal entries. Due to turnover in the Nome Public Schools business office, journal entries were not properly reviewed or approved. Two other findings noted that corrections were needed to reconcile and maintain federal and state grants. In a fourth finding, the auditors found that all reports due for the State's K-12 Tobacco Prevention grant were filed late. The auditors said that high turnover within the business office— the business manager changed and more than 20-year business office employee Mary Reader retired — caused the deadlines for grant reporting being overlooked and for grant reconciliations and maintenance of files being not correctly done.

School board member Barb Nickels commented after the presentation. "We knew that. We were aware that there were difficulties getting reports filed on time and we're dealing with it," Nickels said.

School Board President Betsy Brennan said that the findings did not affect the district's eligibility for grants since the new business manager Paula Coffman was immediately 'on it' and filed the reports.

Compliant with state regulations, the school district's operating fund balance was under 10 percent, at just over $1.1 million.

The financial audit also revealed a few pleasant surprises. The schools have spent $200,000 less on energy costs than budgeted. The school district also brings in more revenue from student transportation than it is spending on it, something the auditors found unusual compared to other school districts. In addition, the district is making money on teacher housing.

Recouping lunch money

In line with other school districts state wide, Nome is losing money on food services, specifically $124,000 for the past school year ending July 30, 2012. In this context, Superintendent Mike Brawner also asked the school board for direction on how to deal with a lunch program policy and outstanding dues. As of last month. lunch dues totaling $16,142.80 have not been paid by students. Broken down by schools, $12,631 haven't been paid by Elementary School students, $3,511 by Nome-Beltz students.

Brawner said there is a lack of policy guidance in how to recoup school lunch dues. The schools don't want to deny children lunch, withholding transcripts unless the lunch dues are paid off doesn't sound too good either and taking parents to civil court over lunch dues does not meet criteria spelled out in policies dealing with damage to school prop-

"It gets me and Principal Grimes in a sticky situation when parents come and ask 'What is the policy?" Brawner told the school board. The school district now deals with the discrepancy by putting money from the general fund into the school lunch program, but no efforts are made to recoup it. While lunch programs exist for free and reduced student lunches, there are no policies on the book on how to deal with lunch delinquency. The school board asked the Superintendent and Business Manager Paula Coffman to gather information how other schools deal with the same problem, to bring it to the board and pass it on to the policy committee.

Community survey

Claire Richardson with the Association of Alaska School Boards presented a summary of the 2012 school climate and connectedness. The AAASB contracted with the American Institutes for Research to evalustudent and school staff perception of school climate and student perceptions of school connectedness. In a survey conducted between February 6-17, 276 Nome Public Schools students and 35 NPS staff participated. The survey's highlights included that the survey results didn't differ much from last year's results. At the district level, the survey indicates that boys had higher scale scores than girls for finding respectful climate and parent/community involvement in the schools.

D and F students rated low scores for high expectations, for school safety and for finding caring adults at their school. Richardson brought the good news first saying that 82 percent of students said they want a college education after graduating from Nome-Beltz, that 78 percent feel they are encouraged by a caring adult. But on the flipside, the survey also found out that 26 students said they've given up on school and 33 kids said they won't be missed when they wouldn't show up at school. Richardson was in Nome for a few days to conduct a "community inventory" to find a common unified idea in order to help Nome students succeed. She explained that it is more than just the school that determines the success of students. "There is a strong connection between the community's connectedness to its schools and academic success," Richardson said. "Everybody has a role to play in the success of every child in Nome," Richardson said. "I'm excited to tap into what people have to say," Richardson conducted 50 20-minute interviews of community members and will present the results to the school board in January or February.

The next regular school board meeting is scheduled for Dec. 11, with the budget review on the included on a list of airports that were eligible for subsidies through the federal Essential Air Service program. EAS supports service to hundreds of rural communities in Alaska where the cost of providing regularly scheduled flights would mean the villages rarely got served at all. When the original list of eligible communities was created in 1978, Little Diomede was inadvertently left off the list and has been struggling with the issue ever since.

The helicopter company Evergreen Helicopters has a twin-engine helicopter, a pilot and a mechanic stationed in Nome and holds the mail contract. Evergreen placed a bid on the passenger service and was awarded the contract at the end of September. The helicopter lands on a special helipad near the beach in front of the steep village site.

Little Diomede acting mayor Michelle Kulukhon said that life is pretty good now that there is regular, year-round helicopter service to the island.

She said this eliminates the unpredictability of getting stuck in either Wales or Nome. "Once I was stuck in Nome for one week and then in Wales for two weeks," Kulukhon said. The lucky ones of the stranded passengers in Wales stayed with relatives or friends. Others had to rent a room in the Wales multi-purpose

Nomeites to take part in Christmas Bird Count

Across North America, the Christmas Bird Count season is approaching. The official count period is December 14, 2012 to January 5, 2013. The Nome area has a 15-mile diameter circle that is the established count area (AKNO). Since 1972 more than 20 species of birds have been identified, so there is a good chance to see more than ravens and buntings.

This is a reminder to birders in Nome, Alaska that we will have a Christmas Bird Count on Saturday, December 15, 2012. In case of stormy weather, the alternate date is Saturday, December 29, 2012.

To register, you can contact me directly or use the online link below. Fees are no longer collected from participants so the count is free. You will need to record the number of people in your party, method of transportation, time afield, distance traveled, and of course the number and species of birds. Birds seen 3-days-before and 3-days-after the 'count day' during the 'count week' are also listed on the CBC report. Please get inspired for a full week of searching for winter birds near Nome.

The count circle extends as far as: Dexter (Kougarok Road), Glacier Creek bridge (New Glacier Creek Road), Sunset Mine area (Teller Road), and almost to Hastings Creek (Council Road). Observations by vehicle, snowmachine, foot, ski, dog team, or at feeders are welcome. Please contact me if you are interested in counting birds so there is good coverage of roads, trails, and areas.

For those interested in a group breakfast about 10:00 AM before counting, please offer your ideas and help pick a location. After counting, please submit your observations, count data and photos to me by phone or email. I'll post a message closer to the Saturday count date (Dec 15).

Elim, Unalakleet advance to State Mixed Six

By Jeffrey Erickson

The population of tiny White Mountain surged this week with the addition of 10 Bering Strait School District volleyball teams, each primed to compete for the Western Conference Mixed Six title and punching their tickets for the State Championships.

Coming into the tournament, a very powerful Unalakleet Wolfpack team looked to continue their winning ways. They'd completed the season with a 22-0 record with victories over many of the top teams in the state and looked to repeat as conference champions. Quality teams from across the district aimed to be the stumbling block and ascend the podium Saturday night.

Tournament matches started Saturday night and it was quickly established that a St. Michael Storm team that had finished at the bottom of the rankings could be the surprise team. Led by senior Jake Staub's energy and serving, the young team stormed through their first round match with Brevig Mission and moved on.

Friday matches began with quarterfinals with the favorites claiming victories. The Elim/Unalakleet match was entertaining as the Eagles hitter Thomas Amaktoolik played a monstrous defensive match trying to stem the ferocious power of the Wolfpack's frontline, Stuart Towarak and Colin Corsetti. Ultimately the offense prevailed and Unalakleet moved on to the semifinals.

In the Friday night semifinals the home crowd was treated to a great match with their own Wolves taking on the Teller Aklaqs. Teller had entered the tournament seeded second but had lost their setter, Allison Topkok, to an ankle injury days before arriving. Both teams gave it all they had but in the end the senior leadership of Asa Bergamaschi and Precious Lincoln prevailed and the home team advanced to the championship match against the Wolfpack who, aided by the effective "Whisper-serve" of senior Nilson Mixsooke, had beaten a valiant Golovin Lynx squad in the other semifinal.

Saturday is a day for fighting back. Teams that have lost scrap to get back to the top knowing that two teams qualify for state and that hope isn't lost. The St. Michael Storm took that challenge to heart and budding star Skye Shipton began to use his height effectively and the St. Michael squad began to climb the hill. In a huge upset they dismantled a Golovin squad that had their sights set on a 9th consecutive trip to the state tournament. Shutting the Lynx out 3-0 signaled the arrival of this young team and caught the notice of the rest of the remaining squads.

The championship is played early due to the fact that there is always a possibility for a "true second" match for the #2 seed to the state tournament. With great play from their very deep group of girls and the hitting of the boys, Unalakleet was just too much for the shorter, but big-hearted host Wolves. Senior Amos Brown played his best match of the tournament in support of his more renowned teammates but it was in vain. In a tense match that followed the championship game the Elim Eagles, led by senior Josh Jemewouk and 8th grade setter Julie Amaktoolik proved too much for the Storm who were also fatigued from playing 6 matches and settled for 4th place.

The final match pitted the White Mountain team against the Eagles from Elim. It was a tense battle that raged both on the court and in the stands. A very vocal group of Eagle fans kept pace with the larger home crowd creating a great atmosphere and waves of cheers for each successful play. In the end the Eagles survived a hard fought battle and, for the first time in school history, advanced to the State Championships.

DEFENSE— Unalakleet senior Nilson Mixsooke bumps a ball up for the Wolfpack in the 2012 Western Conference championship match.

Nome, BSSD wrestling compete in regional tournament

By Stephen Palmatier

Last weekend, the Nome Nanooks and schools from the Bering Strait School District competed in the Northern Conference Regional Tournament in Kotzebue. With only the state tournament remaining, the wrestling season is drawing to an end and with it, the fall sports season.

With the regionals not only being the last tournament before the state competition but also the way to qualify for state, the teams knew they needed to compete well there. The Nome Nanooks, in particular, did just that, as they were able to send nine different competitors to next week's state tournament in Nikiski by each one finishing in the top two spots for their weight bracket.

Photos by Rachel Joy McElwee

The team competition was taken by the Kotzebue Huskies in the tournament, and the small school champion went to Unalakleet. The most outstanding wrestler award went to Sarah Tebbits of Noorvik. With Nome and the Bering Strait School District sending many participants to next week's state tournament, the question will be how the teams will fare with the much deeper pool of talent than regionals in each bracket. With the teams having played in stiff competition already this year in tournaments, the results have been positive for the teams, but only very few having competed for a state title. Will it be any different this Friday and Saturday in Nikiski? That remains to be seen. What is true though is that the teams in this area certainly gave themselves many different opportunities to make a mark.

Firemen's Carnival attracts big crowd

By Diana Haecker

There are a few traditions that Nome can proudly call its own, and one of them is the Firemen's Carnival, held on the first Saturday in December at the Nome Rec Center. The event is a fundraiser for the Nome Volunteer Fire Department, to raise money for turnout gear, tools and to replace gear that suffered fire damage, said NVFD assistant chief Jerry Steiger. The carnival offered booths of all sorts to benefit other community organizations. There was the Preschool Tattoo booth, the Pioneer Igloo No. 1 operated the Fish Pond, the Nome-Beltz Swim Team spun the wheels for candy and the Nome Volunteer Ambulance Dept. offered gambling opportunities by putting on a rubber duck race. The Nome Rotarians dished out their specialty: Barbeque ribs. Firemen manned the Wheels of Fortune, the dart booth and tended to the Bingo tables.

Kids toted around huge stuffed monkeys won at the wheel of fortune, sported hats and colorful wigs, and tried not to loose their balloons.

At midnight, the big raffle took place. The grand prize, a Polaris touring snowmachine, went to Dennis Bahnke. Ken James won the two Alaska Airline tickets.

Dan Takak and Paul Kosto won each an ounce of gold from Anderson Mining and the Christine Rose. Anna Moore walked home with the flatscreen TV and game system, Charlie Weiss won 1,000 pounds barge freight donated by Alaska Logistics. Lori Olanna won two recliners donated by Nome Trading Co. and Brendon Tran won a Yamaha generator donated by Morgan's Sales and Service. Dave Latham got the Dewalt tool kit from Outsider's Hardware and Cathy Chamberlain won 100 gallons of heating fuel donated by Bonanza.

Whooping cough: Increase in reported cases in Alaska this year

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

More than 200 cases of whooping cough have been reported in Alaska this year, and the number continues to rise, according to the Alaska Department of Epidemiology. This compares to only 24 cases reported in Alaska in all of 2011.

Around half of the reported cases of whooping cough in Alaska are from urban centers like Anchorage. The remainder are from rural Alaska, with 17, cases reported so far this year from northern coastal communities.

The number of actual cases in rural Alaska is believed to be much higher. Not everyone who has whooping cough gets tested. Sometimes doctors treat the infection based on symptoms alone. And sometimes people with an infection do not seek care because the symptoms are mild or the infection mimics some other common infection.

The increase in cases in Alaska this year is not unusual. There is an expected increase of whooping cough every three to five years. 2012 happens to be one of those years. Alaska last saw a rise in reported cases back in 2008 when 273 cases were reported.

Whooping cough is caused by the Bordetella pertussis bacteria. Pertussis primarily attacks the lungs and causes a severe cough. The bacteria are transmitted on droplets of mucus from the nose or droplets of phlegm from the lungs after a

The illness starts as a mild infection with a low-grade fever, runny nose, and a mild cough. This is the highly infectious stage and can last up to two weeks.

Pertussis then leads to a harsh coughing stage lasting up to eight weeks. The cough during this phase can be so strong that breathing back in after a coughing fit causes the characteristic "whoop" sound as the person tries to refill the lungs with Pertussis can be harmful, even fatal, to infants. This is why children receive multiple doses of the vaccine during the first six years of life. Prior to routine vaccination, many children during whooping cough epidemics.

Experts believe that the effectiveness of the pertussis vaccine wanes over time, allowing for outbreaks in people who were vaccinated as children.

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) therefore recommend a pertussis booster for pre-teens, teenagers, pregnant women, healthcare workers, and otherwise healthy adults at least every 10 years. More frequent intervals are not considered harmful.

During years like this when whooping cough cases rise in Alaska, there is not reason for alarm, but there is good reason to be prepared. Here is how:

First, check the date of your most recent vaccination to ensure the pertussis immunization is up to date. This will be recorded as either DTaP for children, or Tdap for older children, teenagers, and adults. The "P" in these vaccines stands for pertus-

Second, wash your hands, especially after wiping your nose or coughing, and avoid contact with others, especially infants, when sick. It may sound like a small thing, but washing hands is the single most important way to prevent the spread of pertussis and other common infectious diseases.

Third, see your doctor if you have symptoms of a respiratory illness that lasts more than two weeks. Unlike viral causes of a cough, whooping cough can be treated with antibiotics. Not everything that causes a cough is whooping cough, but your provider can help you determine if treatment is warranted.

Finally, if you have been exposed to someone who tested positive for whooping cough, speak to your doctor about whether or not a prophylactic course of antibiotics would be a good idea for you. People with underlying illnesses like COPD, asthma, severe diabetes, rheumatoid arthritis, or heart disease may benefit from the protective effect of antibiotics after an exposure. People who are not up-to-date on their pertussis vaccinations may also benefit from preventive antibiotics after exposure to someone with whooping

When the 28th Alaska Legislature convenes in Juneau on January 15, I will begin a new term as your senator for Senate District T, and I am honored to serve you and the State of Alaska. With redistricting taking effect, the new senate district we live in is larger than Texas. It has 90 communities and 10 school districts. In fact, it is so large that five of the 13 regional Native corporations have member communities in the district. As a result, the issues my office will work on have become more diverse. I look forward to working with constituents, both old and new, on all the issues that affect our district. My office also plans to focus on the statewide issues of the high cost of energy, declining salmon runs, Arctic policy, OCS policv, public safety/VPSO, and oil and gas tax issues.

Redistricting has altered the legislative landscape for Alaska. Rural Alaska has lost seats and therefore some influence in the legislature. We have to work harder and smarter because our senate district has grown in size. Now I represent Alaskans from the Upper Yukon and Copper River regions in addition to Alaskans from the upper half of the state. Here are a few facts about the new Senate District T:

It is the largest legislative district in the United States

• It contains over half the area of the state. It is larger • There are 90 communities in the district. McCarthy is farthest south, and Barrow is farthest north.

• There are 10 school districts in Senate District T: Alaska Gateway; Bering Strait; Copper River; Delta-Greely; Galena City; Nome; North Slope Borough; Northwest Arctic Borough; Yukon Flats; and Yukon-Koyukuk.

• Five of the 13 ANCSA corporations have communities in the new district:

Ahtna, Inc. Arctic Slope Regional Corporation Bering Straits Native Corporation Doyon, Limited

NANA Regional Corporation

• Senate District T contains almost 43 percent of Alaska's shoreline, bordering the Beaufort and Chukchi seas, Kotzebue Sound, and Norton Sound.

problems with fox. I hear the chief has even called the other trapper, who still resides there, for help but he is busy with other things. I can't help but wonder if I had still been snaring, that the fox would not be a problem. Likely 10 or so would have fallen to my snares by this time if I was still there. The snow dump, which is quite near the elementary, was a hot spot for fox.

For those not familiar with western red fox, they are common carriers of rabies. Nome most every year has a fox or 2 that tests positive for

Likely, common sense is all but absent from the city council on this issue (well, except for Tom Sparks) but I would recommend the city council authorize a bounty on red fox - 40 bucks per fox might get someone interested. You only need to remove 20 or so to reduce the problem in town. I'm sure the council could just reduce Denise' or Josie' business lunch budget for a month to find the money. It is not likely you will get any help from the Ak. Dept of F&G. Those with Musk Ox problems can attest to that.

If the city can't come to an agreement on how to help with the problem, it will probably all go away along about April. Let's just hope some kid isn't bit by a rabid fox in the meantime!

Sincerely

cessing our natural resources is severely hampered by the lack of affordable energy. Our rich resources that are harvested are sent elsewhere for processing and refining, which could be done here in Alaska, creating thousands of well-compensated jobs.

Nowhere else in the country must small communities generate their own electricity. A population of 700,000 should require one or two power plants to supply all their energy needs - both electricity and heat. Yet in Alaska we have more than 200 power plants. And rural Alaskans are paying, on average, 50 cents a kilowatt-hour and $6.00 per gallon for diesel fuel.

It's time we put our own resources to use for all Alaskans. We must develop power plants on the North Slope, where enormous gas resources exist. There is plenty of gas to meet Alaskans' needs and for future export. We must build high voltage transmission to deliver that power to the Fairbanks area, to Southcentral and to Northern, Western and Interior Alaska. Electricity from clean burning natural gas can provide reasonably priced energy for lights, heat, resource extraction, value-added processing and everything else needed to restore our state's wealth and vibrancy.

Affordable energy will break the stranglehold of petroleum fuels in rural Alaska and eliminate the cost of importing gas for urban Alaska. We could save billions of dollars being spent on energy today and reduce Alaska's greenhouse gas emissions more than any mega renewable energy project could.

The team developing the All Alaska Energy Project proposes to build large scale gas-fired generation on the North Slope and High Voltage Direct Current transmission lines spanning key areas of the state, bringing lowcost electricity to community and industrial hubs. Simultaneously, regional grids will be developed to aggregate community electrical loads in preparation for connection to the larger grid as it is built. The projected cost of the electricity delivered is expected to be significantly lower (less than half) the equivalent cost of diesel fuel or imported LNG, even after taking into consideration the high efficiency of today's smaller-scale generation and heating systems.

The cost of energy for large industrial projects such as the Ambler mining district, the Livengood proposed mines, Fort Knox, Nome, Donlin Creek and others is currently the "make or break" cost issue for future development. Electricity could be delivered to most of these locations for around ten cents a kilowatt-hour.

Alaska's cost of energy makes us uncompetitive in the areas of resource extraction and refining and in processing products such as fish. Those costs are also contributing to crippling social issues as families and businesses struggle to survive in areas denuded of economic opportunity because of unaffordable energy.

None of the major proposed energy projects or programs currently being reviewed by the State of Alaska addresses the cost and availability of energy across the state. This project does. It proposes a system that is costcompetitive and uses well tested technology to cure Alaska's energy challenges. The All Alaska Energy Project would deliver more energy, to more Alaskans, in less time and at a lower cost than any proposal to date. And it does not hinge on the State spending billions of dollars to build the project. It makes such good economic and practical sense that private financial backing is available to underwrite most of the project costs. But it does require the State to embrace this project as a significant component of Alaska's energy future.

It's time to free Alaskans from the tyranny of expensive energy! In conjunction with utility upgrades already underway or proposed, this project would catapult Alaska into a sustainable, prosperous future.

Port panel dumps Rustler on Nome Common Council

By Sandra L. Medearis

The sea ice has caught a boat belonging in part to miner Mike Benchoff on the wrong side of the water again. Now the deadline for getting out of the water has closed, hitting Benchoff on the backsides.

Port of Nome ruled boats had to be out of the water by Oct. 31. Benchoff's tugboat, the Rustler, aka Conaca—Citizens of Nome Anti Corruption Association—is still in the water. As a result, Harbormaster Joy Baker and Port of Nome have thrown the book of tariffs at Benchoff

At a Dec. 6 meeting, port commissioners voted unanimously without discussion to pass a resolution to impound the Rustler, to sue Benchoff for costs and fines owed and to ban him from using the Port of Nome. Benchoff, referred to the Port Commission by the Nome Common Council, almost did not get a word in edgewise before the vote.

The Commission had loaded for bear. They notified Benchoff of the meeting, per state law. They had Patrick Munson, an attorney for the city on the phone line.

Benchoff did not get a copy of the resolution.

A document produced at the Dec. 6 Nome Port Commission meeting showed Benchoff owing a total of $28,852.50 in fines for the period of a month beginning Nov. 1 to Dec. 03. The total fines billed to Benchoff since Sept. 22 totaled $34,852.50.

On the first day past the Oct. 31 deadline, the port billed Benchoff $500; for the second day, $750; for the third day past the deadline, the fines began to accumulate at $950 per day per the port tariff.

Benchoff worked to the last minute on the project to make the boat capable to perform suction dredging. When he finally undertook to move the tug from its moorage in the harbor to the barge ramp on the west side of the Snake River near the end of October, a north wind had blown the water out of the harbor. The Rustler went aground short of the barge ramp and sat waiting for water while ice started to form around it. Ice imprisoned the boat while Benchoff and his crew fashioned an invention to lift the boat from the ice to bring it out of the water. That did not work.

Benchoff almost did not get an opportunity to comment as the commission prepared to vote on suing him for fines owed and banning him from the port.

Benchoff's opportunity was at the beginning of the meeting, Jim West Jr., chairman, told Benchoff. He did not have a copy of the resolution at

Nome Post office delivers Christmas

When the boom box at the Postal Annex building is cranking out Lynyrd Skynyrd or a mix of harddriving disco music, it must be Christmas. stashed under the Christmas tree.

Living in Nome or the surrounding villages means that last minute shopping limits the options to very few stores. So, Northwest Alaskans plan ahead, shop online and get the presents delivered through the U.S. Postal Service. For the Nome post office employees this means: absolutely no leave for the month of December, except for emergencies or being really sick. And it means working 10- or 12-hour days, sorting a never-ending avalanche of catalogs and dealing with stressed and angry customers looking for their mail-ordered gifts.

This year, the Christmas rush has arrived a week earlier than usual, says Postmaster Laura Barnhill. The onslaught began Monday, Dec. 3 when it "usually" begins around December 10.

That Monday, the postal van that normally makes two trips a day between the Post Office in Nome and the Postal Annex at Port Road, made 12 trips to move all the mail back

Port panel divvies up $10 million for port improvements

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Port Commission has diligently navigated its way into one gunk hole and then another, sorting out a spending plan for Nome's share of proceeds from a general obligation bond issue approved by voters in November for $453,499,200 for transportation projects.

On the Web:

www.nomenugget.net E-mail:

nugget@nomenugget.com

Nome will have $10 million to spend on port improvements and infrastructure. After hard work and final soundings Dec. 6, the panel found the main channel to a spending agreement among commissioners, harbormaster and their contract port development consultant, Paul

The City of Nome through the commission will have $10 million to spend as soon as a grant agreement has been signed, according to City Manager Josie Bahnke. The commission decided to spend $1 million for design and study to extend the causeway into deeper water as a start on a project running into $70-$80 million. Another $4 million would go to dredging for west side Snake River moorage expansion down to minus four feet to accommodate suction gold dredges and towards a $3 million high ramp project. Expansion of the Snake River moorage would also serve a planned industrial development zone. Recent testimony of barge and cargo operators before the commission reinforced the idea to build a middle dock between two existing cells, known as City Dock and West Gold Dock, along the east side of the causeway for ease and safety of navigation. That project would absorb the remaining $5 million out of the $10 million for Nome. Nome has that project on the state Legislature priority list for additional funds.

The middle dock, to cost about $13 million at completion, has reached the stage of 95 percent design, as have the moorage expansion and high barge ramp. These projects have yet to pass through the National Environmental Policy Act process concerning effects on the environment.

The high ramp next to the existing launch ramp would expand the port's cargo handling capacity.

According to port executives, port commerce moved $15.2 tons of fuel, $52,041 tons of construction and cargo material, and 36,841 tons of gravel. Several arctic tourist vessels, several research vessels and a fleet of 97 gold seeking vessels used the port, for a total of 128 dredge vessels. Norton Sound Economic Development Corp., which has a seafood processing facility at the port, processed 40,813 pounds of halibut and 203,632 pounds of crab.

As of Oct. 31, season's figures showed fuel activity at 1,4 million gallons inbound and 270,928 gallons exported. Additionally, there were three mining research vessels permitted, 19 sailboats, two tugs, two subsistence craft and two barges. With the fishing vessels and dredging support vessels, docking permits tion from Joy Baker, harbormaster.

The City has asked for a additional $8 million in Gov. Sean Parnell's budget for infrastructure to relieve congestion caused by the gold dredging industry opened up with a DNR lease sale of offshore mining properties.

In other lighter news, Bahnke, city manager, said that property under purchase by the City from Nome Gold Alaska north of the upper industrial pad would be named Thornbush Subdivision. "Thornbush" is an element of Harbormaster Joy Baker's personal e-mail address.

Baker has said she would not renew her contract with City of Nome as harbormaster. Baker's current contract runs through June 30, Bahnke said.

Jingles! I mean "Shingles." Don't get them unless you enjoy feeling like you are being beaten by a 2X4 or kicked by a mule, unless you enjoy having parts of your body covered in painful, itching sores, unless you enjoy feeling like someone is applying electrodes to your nerve endings causing you to double over in pain and writhing in agony, unless you are willing to submit your body to possible years of the above. The Shingles virus lives in your body forever and can attack you so long as you're alive.

Get the picture? Imagine if this happened in your eye! (Check it out on Wikipedia.) I understand this edition of the Nome Nugget will include Dr. Lawrence's article on Shingles. Please pay attention.

Dear Ms. McGuire,

Thanks so much for the article on the Nome Health Fair in the Thursday, Nov. 22, Nome Nugget newspaper. There is one point for which I would like to submit a correction.

The last sentence of the secondto-last paragraph of the Page 8 article on the Health Fair incorrectly stated that "Also, people, with a family history of colon cancer should be screened starting at age Actually, all people (men and women both) should be screened starting at age 50. People who have a family history of the disease should be screened starting at age 40, or even earlier.

We want to make sure that your readership know that: Colorectal cancer is preventable, treatable, and beatable, if everyone over age 50 gets screened, or earlier if they have a family history of colorectal cancer. Community members in Nome with screening questions should contact their healthcare provider to find out more, or they can call the NSHC Specialty Clinic at 907-443-

Thank you for your time and attention.

Chief's Notes

By John Papasodora, chief Nome Police Department

First come my thanks to Renee Lammer who does a wonderful job putting together the draft of the media release each week. Without her work, there are times the media release would not make it in time for the Nome Nugget dead-

Each week, we review the 'Calls for Service' for the seven day period of the prior week. By my count there were 137 incidents that generated calls for service case numbers. Of those, 17 are included in the media release. So you may ask yourself, 'what are the other 120 calls?'

Ranked in frequency, there were 22 welfare checks. These are those times when someone calls in with a concern about either someone they know or someone that they see who appears to be in distress. Most often, we locate the person and check on them to insure they are all right and arrange for appropriate services to meet their circumstances. Next there were 16 security checks; whether at the airport to insure that TSA has no problems when flights are coming in or going out; or checking on a building or business that may not be secure – that's' what these calls are. Then we had 14 animal-related complaints of which several were regarding the nefarious and notorious fox that have taken up residence in town. Then come the ambulance requests (thank you all volunteers of the Nome Volunteer Ambulance Department for helping keep us all safe). The remainder of the calls are a smattering of various call types: drunk down; locate/missing person; trespass; disturbance;

But the basic point here is that the police are handling a wide variety of calls that consume a great deal of time. Consequently, we need the commucontinued on page 13

Education Keeps Us Ahead

The United States is not training enough scientists. We are not training enough mathematicians and we are running short of physicians. The past political leadership on the state and federal levels has had an attitude against science as if similar to the devil's fear of holy water. How did we get such ignorant leaders? Is there a plot to keep us stupid?

Let's look at our own schools here in western Alaska. Do our high schools all have real chemistry and physics teachers? Do we teach upper level classes in mathematics? Do our students fear they might have to break an academic sweat in science? Do our students take minimal classes and find themselves without a worthwhile schedule in their senior year? Do we encourage careers in science and engineering? Do we promote intellectual laziness? Do we confuse science with religion and think that creationism is science? Do we even know the difference between religion and science? Let's demonstrate our scientific ignorance. Seven days to make the earth? Give us a break! Apparently we have public school teachers spouting this concept in the classroom.

We have to get out of the technological dark ages and develop our intellectual and creative talents to keep our nation competitive with the rest of the world. To do this we need to spend money to train more science teachers to inspire our youth's intellectual curiosity. We can't let our government do stupid things like building a multibillion-dollar dam on an earthquake fault line. We can't afford to slide over the intellectual cliff. -N.L.M.

ICC demands "immediate action" on climate change

In a press release the Inuit Circumpolar Council said it wants to see reductions in the amount of black carbon that enters the Arctic as it rapid climate changes in the Arctic pose a challenge for all circumpolar inhabitants. The ICC urged global leaders in the UN Climate Change conference in Dohar, Qatar from Nov. 26 through Dec. 8 to recognize the essential role that the Arctic plays in maintaining the world's climate. The ICC appealed to global leaders to support the Inuit in sustaining the ice-dependent lands and livelihoods. ICC chair Aqqaluq Lynge laid out six points, including the recognition of the Arctic's role in sustaining the global climate systems and supporting life on Earth.

Leaders also should support the integration of traditional knowledge and community-based monitoring of environmental change.

The third point proposes to create "green technology fund" that would assist Arctic inhabitants, indigenous and remote communities to develop renewable energy options.

Institute of the North hosted Arctic Infrastructure conference in Iceland

The Institute of the North held a conference with the theme "Response Capacity and Sustainable Development in the Arctic." conference is part of the Arctic Marine and Aviation Transportation Infrastructure Initiative that was approved by the Arctic Council's Sustainable Development Working Group to assess transportation infrastructure in the Arctic. The project evaluates Northern infrastructure ports, airports, and response capability - by inventorying maritime and aviation assets in the Arctic.

U.S. House approved two year Coast Guard bill

A bill to uphold the Coast Guard's ability to carry out its many missions unanimously passed the House of Representatives last week. The bill requires the Coast Guard to halt the scrapping of one of two heavy icebreaking ships, the Polar Sea. Now the Coast Guard will have to keep the Polar Sea until it assesses whether it is cost effective to make needed engine repairs to the ship. Currently idled in Seattle, the icebreaker provides access to ports like Nome, which last year received emergency shipments of fuel from Russia that wouldn't have been possible without the Coast Guard ice-

The bill also requires the Coast Guard to study the feasibility and potential of establishing a deep-water port in the Arctic and to conduct an analysis of projected needs for continuing operations in Arctic and Antarctic regions including shore infrastructure, communications and other logistical needs.

Other major Alaska provisions include an extension of the waiver for incidental vessel discharges from Alaska's fishing fleet and other vessels under 79 feet. The bill extends Environmental Protection Agency waiver through 2014.

The Coast Guard and Maritime Transportation Act of 2012 (H.R. 2838) was first introduced in the House by Transportation and Infrastructure Committee Chairman John L. Mica (R-FL) and Coast Guard and Maritime Transportation Subcommittee Chairman Frank LoBiondo (R-NJ). The bill initially passed the House in November 2011. The Senate adopted a revised version of the House measure in September. Last week's measure passed by voice vote and reflects a resolution of the differences between the House- and Senate-passed bills. The measure now goes back to the Senate.

Ticking Arctic carbon bomb may be bigger than thought

Scientists are expressing concerns about the carbon locked in the Arctic's vast expanse of frozen soil. New field studies were presented at the fall meeting of the American Geophysical Union and quantify the amount of soil carbon at 1.9 trillion metric tons. This suggests that previous estimates underestimated the climate risk if this carbon is set free. A new analysis of laboratory experiments that simulate carbon release by thawed soil is bolstering worries that continued carbon emissions could unleash a massive Arctic carbon wallop. Disappearing Arctic ice is an effect of human-made climate change. The melting of frozen soil, or permafrost, can drive warming. As the soil thaws, microbes devour carbon previously locked inside, unleashing carbon dioxide which is a potent greenhouse gas. The carbon dioxide amplifies the warming power of carbon pollution in a vicious feedback loop, reports the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

but not limited to:

Wildfires darken Greenland snowpack, increase melting

Satellite observations have revealed the first direct evidence of smoke from Arctic wildfires drifting over the Greenland ice sheet, tarnishing the ice with soot and making it more likely to melt under the sun. At the American Geophysical Union meeting last week, an Ohio State University researcher presented images from NASA's Cloud-Aerosol Lidar and Infrared Pathfinder Satellite Observation (CALIPSO) satellite, which captured smoke from Arctic fires billowing out over Greenland during the summer of 2012. Researchers previously recorded a 6 percent drop in reflectivity in Greenland over the last decade, which will cause enough warming to bring the entire surface of the ice sheet to melting each summer, as it did in 2012.

the beginning of the meeting, Benchoff countered.

Technically, they were not allowed to let him speak, the commission told Benchoff. He could speak when the issue went forward to Nome Common Council, they said.

However, when he appealed to the Nome Common Council at its meeting Dec. 3, Councilman Stan Andersen, acting mayor, had told Benchoff to take up his issue with the Nome Port Commission and then bring it to the Council if necessary.

Made aware of this, several commissioners said they would not have a problem allowing Benchoff to speak, but he could not ask questions, they said.

"I can explain it to you, but I cannot understand it for you," Benchoff said. "How can I talk about the resolution without asking questions?"

Benchoff told the commission that besides the north wind draining the available draft, that a depth chart showed more water than actually stood at the ramp even on a good day. There was not room for him to get his trailer under his boat, he said.

How so? Gravel loaded and spilling over the sides of barges over seasons had built up and not been dredged, Benchoff said. His welded invention to lift the boat out of the water hand not worked because of buildup making an uneven bottom, Benchoff told the port panel.

"There were five feet of water and ice on one side, eight feet on the other," Benchoff said.

There had been no transfer of gravel at the ramp during the 2012 season, Josie Bahnke, city manager, told the commission.

"Our survey showed adequate depths," Bahnke added.

Benchoff told the commission he thought the fines of $950 per day were unreasonable.

Benchoff received a letter at the end of November advising him that if he were to use his fabricated steel structure to remove his boat, he had to operate in the daytime with four hours notice for port staff to observe to ensure "that no damage occurs to the facility and people are not put in harm's way," according to the letter from Bahnke, city manager.

Now the resolution approved by the Nome Port Commission Dec. 6 must go to the Nome Common Council for approval and enforcement, alteration or denial.

The commission's resolution cites the Port of Nome tariff and Benchoff's violations, some of which are these:

- Failed to demonstrate the Rustler could operate safely within the port, failed to drive it out of the port under its own power at least once every 30 days.
- Has fallen behind by more than 60 days in keeping his account current
- Has failed to satisfy conditions imposed by the City, failed to fulfill his obligations and keep his promises to remedy the situation.
- Has caused the City to expend more resources and man hours since 2010 than any other port user in trying to enforce the rules of the port since 2010.

• Has allowed the boat to freeze in at the water line in flagrant violation of Tariff Section 05.010 (c).

The resolution authorizes the city attorney to "file a lawsuit to recover the cost of cleaning, removing, storing and/or disposing of Mr. Benchoff's personal property, the vessel, its contents and all hazardous substances or other potential pollutants emanating from or currently on board the vessel."

The resolution also seeks to "permanently ban Mr. Benchoff from using or accessing Port of Nome property for any reason and instructs the City Police Dept. and the City Attorney to enforce the ban through all reasonable and legal means, including citing, arresting, and/or filing suit against Mr. Benchoff for criminal trespassing ..." if he comes onto port property without authorization.

BONANZA—The Nome Port Commission has charged $34,852.50 in fines from Sept. 22 to Dec. 2 against the Rustler, a tugboat frozen into the boat harbor for the winter. The Rustler, sitting cold and alone a few feet from the barge ramp on the west side of the Snake River, is owned by Mike Benchoff and Janet Carlisle of Subsistence Mining Co.

"During Christmas season we move 60 percent more mail than normal," she said.

Barnhill also noticed that this time, there seem to be more catalogs arriving in Nome. While it may help the cash-strapped institution of the U.S. Postal Service, it's to the postal employees' chagrin that bags and bags of catalogs keep coming. The catalogs are the last on a list of things to be moved in the following order: Express mail, letter mail, priority mail, parcel post and then at the very end of a long day, it's sorting catalog mail.

The mail trail

Mail out of Nome, even mail from Nome to Nome, gets shipped out at night and sorted in Anchorage. While this might not make sense to the average postal customer, Barnhill explains that it does make life easier for postal workers here. "A person can sort about 2,500 pieces manually," said Barnhill. "The sorting machines in Anchorage sort 60 pieces per second." So, machines are faster, the sorted mail gets here the next morning, and if you put the fourdigit PO Box number after the zip code, that makes it even easier for the postal worker who gets to put the sorted mail in the box slots.

Mail that is destined for Nome or the villages flies in with Alaska Airlines (letters, express mail), NAC (priority mail), Lynden and Evert (parcel post). The airlines bring the pallets to the Postal Annex – about four to six pallets per day on a normal day, but during Christmas time, it's 14 to 22 pallets loaded with mail up to 1,000 pounds each.

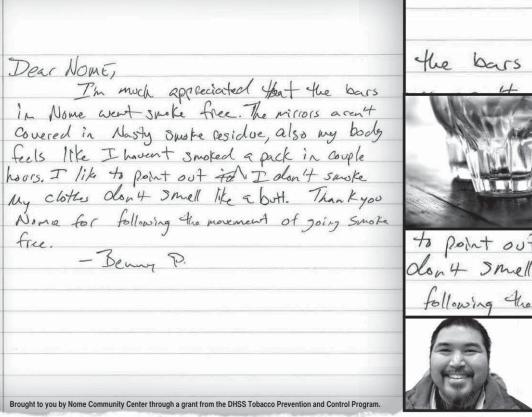

David Immingan said last year was a real challenge as it was only he and Charlie Painter moving the mountains of mail at the annex. This year, they have Conrad Kakaruk to help. When mail starts rolling in from the airlines, it gets sorted by destination: bush, Nome or Nome business. Then the mail is further categorized by size. Small enough packages that can fit in a PO Box get tossed with the letter mail into orange bags. The bush mail is sorted into a different set of orange bags that bear 16 village names, including a bag for Tin City. The village priority mail is then taken to Bering Air or Era for delivery. Bering Air and Ryan Air fly mail destined to Little Diomede to Wales, where it's stored in a heated Connex van. On Wednesday, weather permitting, the boxes and mail are then flown out via Evergreen Helicopter to the island.

Once the distribution elves are done with the bags, they tackle the pallets. "This year starts out fast," Immingan said while carting a stack of boxes around. "There are times now when we all three work on packages and we don't even touch the catalogs until the packages are moved," he said.

Again, the catalogs. Immingan walks over to a cart filled with bags and bags of catalogs.

LL Bean must've figured out that their free shipping deal is big with Nomeites. Thousands of catalogs are waiting to be sorted. Pointing to the cart, Immingan said, "This is the overwhelming part of our job. The catalogs. They start coming from November on and don't stop until Christmas," Immingan said.

Another headache that especially the ladies at the Post Office window have to deal with is FedEx orders. FedEx has no agent in Nome and the furthest it goes by FedEx is to Anchorage. From there on the FedEx parcels get mailed via U.S. Postal Service to their ultimate bush destination. But the customer doesn't know that. When the tracking information says that the parcel was delivered, it just means it arrived in the FedEx office in Anchorage. This causes confusion that is vented on the postal tellers in Nome. "Yes, we do get some angry customers wondering where their packages are," said Barnhill. To deal with the stress and the anger thrown at them, the employees have learned how to professionally handle this. "We all attend code of conduct refresher classes every year," said Barnhill.

Despite the seasonal stress, the postal workers seem to like their employ. Laura Barnhill said she was born into the post office, as her family owned a store, which doubled as the community's post office. Her father was a postmaster in Bethel and she stepped into his footsteps by becoming Bethel's Postmaster in 1985. She's been with the Post Office for more than 30 years. May Barron has been working at the Post Office for 26 years, going on 27 real fast. Charlie Painter for 23 years, David Immingan has been doing this for 18 years, Sherrie Madden for 16 years and the rookie of the bunch, Conrad Kakaruk, has been with the Nome Post Office for one year.

As the music blares through the annex, Immingan puts on his boyish grin and spreads his good mood.

Even Conrad Kakaruk cracks a smile and Immingan says, "See, we turn the music on, we're happy, get things done and when we get it done, it makes the customer happy. That's all we want."

Last minute U.S. Post tips:

- Mail by 12/21: Express mail is guaranteed third day delivery. Mail your package by 3:30 p.m. on 12/21 and it'll get there by Christmas.
- Mail by 12/20: Priority mail does not guarantee three day delivery. Allow a week to the Lower 48.
- Parcel post takes four to six weeks, too late, if you have parcels to go to the Lower 48. Within Alaska, mail it by 12/18 and it'll get there. Not guaranteed, though.
- International/APO-FPO: Mail by 12/18 Priority or Express mail.
- Put an address inside the box in case the box breaks and address becomes unreadable.
- Put clear tape over recipient's address.
- Do not mail alcohol, combustibles, gasoline, some perfumes, corrosives (bleach), explosives (fireworks). If you have a questionable item, call the post office at 443-2401
- Fill the box with packing material or cut the box to size. Pack fragile items in bubble wrap.
- The post office sells boxes, but you can reuse cardboard boxes from the store, just NOT liquor boxes unless you cross out the wording.
- Empty out your PO Box and pick up your packages.

Reports inconclusive on suspected oil contamination of wildlife found near St. Lawrence Island

By Diana Haecker

The mystery of the oiled birds and seals continues as investigators have not been able to pinpoint exactly what kind of oil it is - or where it

Federal and state investigators looking into the oiled wildlife that showed up around St. Lawrence Island in October and November showed different lab test results on samples taken from three oiled seals and two birds. The U.S. Coast Guard, the Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation and the U.S. Department of Fish and Wildlife – together referred to as a "Unified Command"-said that their analysis of oil samples from three seals and two birds didn't all test positive for a petroleum product.

The Coast Guard was notified of oiled wildlife on St. Lawrence Island on Nov. 7 and began the investigation. A seal harvested in the first week of September near Shishmaref also showed signs of oil on its coat and became part of the investigation.

The Coast Guard dispatched pollution investigators and flew an aerial survey on Nov. 8, but found no active oil pollution in the waters around St. Lawrence Island. The next day, Coast Guard and Dept. of Environmental Conservation investigators went to Gambell and Savoonga to conduct a ground search and shoreline assessment to collect sam-

The Coast Guard had samples of potentially oiled wildlife – two seals harvested in Gambell, one in Shishmaref - analyzed at their U.S. Coast Guard Marine Safety Laboratory. According to the USCG lab, the two Gambell seals results did not show the presence of oil from the samples. However, the results for the Shishmaref seal showed presence of heavy degraded oil.

The Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation also tested samples and their results were slightly different. According to DEC lab results, the spotted seal, harvested in Gambell on Oct. 16 tested positive for a petroleum product on its fur.

"Our lab shows a clear answer in that this seal tested positive for oil," said DEC on-site coordinator Tom DeRuyter. The tests run by the Coast Guard on the same seal came back negative for oil.

DeRuyter added that the results for the Shishmaref seal were not as clear-cut. The Shishmaref seal skin sample had blubber with it, meaning that the oiled skin sample mixed with the natural rendering of the seal's own oil. This made more accurate results as to the source of the petroleum oil inconclusive.

The USCG lab was also not able to detect oil on the hair sample their personnel collected from the ringed seal harvested near Gambell on Nov. 12, the Coast Guard said. The DEC did not collect a sample from the ringed seal to test.

Coast Guard spokeswoman Sara Francis said lab results from samples of a live thick-billed Murre, found near Gambell, were soiled with a moderately degraded heavy petroleum product. Additionally, USCG lab results on the feathers of a Common Murre, found near Savoonga, detected moderately degraded heavy petroleum product. However, USCG Marine Safety Laboratory results of the two St. Lawrence Island harvested seals - one ringed and one spotted seal - did not detect oil from the hair samples provided by USCG and ADF&G.

In all, reports of potential oil contamination of wildlife near Saint Lawrence Island included three murres, one crested auklet, one common eider, one kittiwake, two spotted seals- one harvested in Gambell, one in Shishmaref - and one ringed seal.

An update from the DEC said that none of the petroleum detected on the sampled wildlife matched any of the suspected local oil sources sampled such as old drums of oil from landfills on the island.

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration tries to narrow down what type of material was present on each seal using additional samples collected by UAF's Marine Advisory Program in Nome and the North Slope Borough Dept. of Wildlife Management.

The investigators determined that there is not an active spill near St. Lawrence Island but they said they would continue to monitor the situation and investigate any future reports they receive. The last report the unified command received about impacted wildlife was Nov. 26.

Francis said that according to the Coast Guard incident management department in Anchorage, monitoring for this particular case means that any reports from the region will be evaluated for a possible relationship to this case. "Normally each report is investigated as a single incident," Francis said. "We probably won't have any more reports this winter, so come next year we'll really need to monitor for any new information. This will all be done in a unified fashion with at least the Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation folks.'

DEC's Tom DeRuyter said the investigation is ongoing and the unified command is now going through the process to organize the information gleaned from the different lab re-

He said there is no disagreement between the agencies, but that the initial information is inconclusive and the data needs to be organized. "While we have some results back, they don't paint a clear picture," DeRuyter said. "We do know is that there is not a leaking ship or a single large source out there. But we're not done vet.

Plan to reduce chum salmon bycatch hits snag

By Laurie McNicholas

The development of a chum salmon bycatch management plan for the Bering Sea pollock fishery is proving complex, thorny and time-consuming for the North Pacific Fishery Management Council and all parties involved in the issue. Salmon bycatch (also called prohibited species catch) is taken incidentally in large nets towed by trawlers when salmon occur at the same locations and depths as pollock.

Last week in Anchorage, the council decided that an initial review draft of Bering Sea chum salmon by-catch management measures is not ready for public release. The document provides analyses of impacts of chum bycatch measures under consideration by the council. The council conducted initial reviews of earlier versions of the document at meetings in June 2011 in Nome and in March 2012 in Anchorage, and revised the proposed chum bycatch management measures for analysis by staff.

Last week the council approved a motion that places the current analysis of chum bycatch measures on hold. The council asked each pollock fishery sector to provide a proposal detailing how they would incorporate a western Alaska chum salmon avoidance program, with vessel level accountability, within their existing Incentive Plan Agreement for the Chinook salmon bycatch management program.

The program was approved by the council in April 2009 and implemented in January 2011 in Amendment 91 to the Bering Sea/Aleutian Islands Fisheries Management Plan. Amendment 91 combines a limit on the amount of Chinook salmon bycatch with IPAs and a performance standard. The plan is designed to minimize bycatch to the extent practicable in all years and to prevent bycatch from reaching the limit in most years, while providing the pollock fleet with the flexibility to harvest the total allowable catch.

Following is the motion the council approved on Dec. 8.

The Council is concerned that the current suite of alternatives does not provide a solution to the competing objectives outlined in the problem statement and purpose and need, recognizing the overall objective to minimize salmon bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery to the extent practicable, while providing for the ability to achieve optimum yield in the pollock fishery. It is clear from the analysis thus far that measures considered to reduce bycatch of Alaska origin chum have a high likelihood of undermining the Council's previous actions to protect Chinook

"The Council requests that each sector provide a proposal that would detail how they would incorporate a western Alaska chum salmon avoidance program, with vessel level accountability, within their existing Chinook IPA for Council review," the motion continues. "Upon review and public input, the Council would determine whether to further pursue this potential approach to best meet the multiple objectives outlined in the problem statement."

The council's problem statement for the current initial review draft environmental assessment says chum bycatch management measures should be structured to provide incentive for the pollock fleet to improve performance in avoiding chum salmon while achieving optimum yield from the directed fishery and the objectives of the Amendment 91 Chinook salmon bycatch management program. The problem statement also says chum salmon bycatch reduction measures should focus to the extent possible on reducing impacts to Alaska chum salmon as a top priority. The council asked staff to analyze the following four alternative chum bycatch management measures.

Alternative 1

Alternative 1 would continue management measures currently used to minimize chum salmon by-catch. They include a large Chum

Salmon Savings Area closure in the Bering Sea. The area is closed to all trawling Aug. 1-31, and if 42,000 chum salmon are caught in the Catcher Vessel Operational Area from Aug. 15 through Oct. 14, the area will be closed from Sept. 1-Oct. 14. Pollock vessels that participate in a voluntary Rolling Hot Spot (RHS) inter-cooperative agreement (ICA) approved by the National Marine Fisheries Service are exempt from the closure.

The RHS system is designed to reduce chum bycatch by moving the fleet away from areas were it is occurring. A private company, Sea State, administers the program by compiling bycatch and location reports from vessels participating in the pollock fishery and from NMFS. If necessary, Sea State may close areas of high bycatch called "hot spots."

Cooperatives are placed into one of three tiers based on their bycatch rate in comparison to a base or average rate. When closures are designated, cooperatives subject to the closures may not fish in those areas for 4 to 7 days, depending on their tier level. Closures are reevaluated weekly and are subject to change or remain in place for an additional 4 to 7 days, depending on prevailing bycatch rates.

The fleet is subject to enforcement of closures though a private contractual ICA. The agreement was amended in 2011 to remove all provisions related to Chinook bycatch management following implementation of Amendment 91. The current RHS is a chum-only agreement in the pollock fishery B season (June through October). Many of the required ICA provisions are established by regulation.

Virtually all chum bycatch occurs during the B season. Most Chinook bycatch takes place in the A season (January-May), but Chinook often show up in October in the fishery.

Alternative 2

Alternative 2 calls for a hard cap (bycatch limit) and includes several options. When the bycatch limit is reached, all directed fishing must cease. The existing Chum Salmon Savings Area and associated trigger caps would be removed from regulation under this alternative.

Alternative 3 would create new boundaries for the Chum Salmon Savings Area. The existing Chum Salmon Savings Area and associated trigger caps would be removed from regulation. This alternative includes a list of chum bycatch caps ranging from 25,000 fish to 200,000 fish that would trigger closure of the area. However, if the cap level is reached, the triggered closure would not apply to participants in the RHS program.

The industry has proposed a new RHS system under Alternative 3 that modifies the existing program in response to requests by the council. The changes would provide an ability to incorporate new genetic informanagement whereby closures operate at vessel or platform-level rather than cooplevel, and suspension of the chum closure program when Chinook bycatch rates are higher. Other program changes would facilitate a more efficient salmon harvest, which in some years, is likely to reduce fishing in October, thus reducing Chinook bycatch.

Like Alternative 3, Alternative 4 would create new boundaries for the Chum Salmon Savings Area. The existing Chum Salmon Savings Area and the associated trigger cap would be removed from regulations. The new boundaries encompass the area of the Bering Sea where historically 80 percent of the chum bycatch occurred from 2003-2011. The trigger caps that would close this area are described in the analysis, with accounting against the closure to begin on June 10. The area closure would apply to pollock vessels that are not in a RHS system when total chum salmon bycatch from all vessels (those in a RHS system and those not in a RHS system) reaches the trigger cap level. Alternative 4 has six components describing options for triggered closures within specified areas and timeframes.

The alternative includes an option to specify just the goals and objectives of the revised RHS in regulation rather than specifying all provisions of the program in regulation, as is done under current management measures in Alternative 1.

Industry voices criticism

Several industry representatives strongly criticized the analysis of chum bycatch management alternatives in public testimony during the council meeting and at meetings of the council's Science and Statistical Committee (SSC) and Advisory Panel (AP) held in conjunction with the council meeting. The industry representatives urged the council not to release the analysis for public review until it is revised.

The council received recommendations from the SSC and the AP in regard to the analysis. The SSC called for organizational and editing revisions in the document, but recommended that it be released to the public. The AP recommended substantive modifications to the document and weighed in against releasing it to the public.

tions for modifying the document reflect concerns expressed by industry representatives in public comments during the meeting.

1. Correct the assumption made of fleet behavior used in determining impacts of Alternatives 2 and 4, option A. The assumption should be that the fleet will take action to avoid chum salmon before closures or caps are triggered which would cause pollock harvests to slow down and pushing fishing later into the B season. The impacts of the correction should be included in all tables, text and models used in the analysis.

Unalakleet takes state Mixed-6 title, Elim finishes in fifth.

By Jeff Erickson Activities Director Bering Strait School District

The temperatures were chilly in Anchorage over the weekend, but inside the Dimond High School gym the action was hot. Volleyball teams traveled from across the state to meet for the State Mixed Six and 1A/2A girls championships. The Western Conference sent their champion, the undefeated Unalakleet Wolfpack, as well as the runner up Elim Eagles to give their best shot at a title.

For the ninth consecutive year the undefeated Wolfpack would enter the tournament with high expectations hoping to finally achieve the pinnacle of the sport. The young Eagles would be in uncharted waters, however, attending for the very first time in school history.

The quarterfinals pit the eight state qualifiers against each other with the semi-finals on the line. Seeding is difficult in the state tournament since most teams do not play each other due to geographic and cost issues. The matchups are established on a rotational basis. This often results in imbalanced brackets with multiple strong teams on one side, but it is what each team can look toward as the season progresses.

The Elim squad didn't show any jitters as they dismantled another first-time entry, the Emmonak Huskies. With strong performances by seniors Josh Jemewouk and Thomas Amaktoolik they dispatched the top seed from the Yukon, 3-1. With even greater ease the Unalakleet co-ed team squashed the Southeast Champion Thorne Bay Wolverines, 3-0. With their overwhelming power (that even drew blood) they dominated the match against another first time state qualifier. Crushing shot after shot, seniors Stuart Towarak and Colin Corsetti had their opponents ducking.

The semi-finals on Friday looked to be more competitive matches for the teams from Norton Sound. The Eagles started it off against the 2011 state runner-up Noatak Lynx. Though they'd lost some important members to graduation, the Northwest Arctic champions were formidable with strong setting and better-than-average hitting led by Anthony Ashby. Elim got off to a good start, winning the first set, but got their heads down a bit after losing a very close second set and lost the match 3-1 to the Lynx. Again Josh Jemewouk maintained great allaround play, along with teammate Tony Takak, in the loss.

Unalakleet faced the defending state champion Glacier View Wolverines in the second semi-final. They had met earlier in the year with the Wolfpack sweeping their friendly rivals from the Mat-Su school District. The Wolverines were missing an important weapon, Allison Ruisch, who'd been injured several weeks previous. The match was tense and there were many great rallies, with both defenses blocking and digging out shots. Thunderous spikes were met with no fear, as both teams refused to go quietly. The greater depth and continued high-flying net play from Towarak proved too much for the 2011 champions and Unalakleet again swept the Wolverines 3-0 to advance to the state championship game.

On Saturday the Eagles returned to the court to face Glacier View for third place. They never quit and played with their heads high, but the more experienced Wolverines pulled away and won the match 3-0 to send

Elim to a still respectable fifth place finish in their initial state tournament

With the hoped-for all-BSSD championship no longer in the cards the anticipation began to build. Both teams, the Unalakleet Wolfpack as well as the Noatak Lynx, had finished second at the state tournament but neither had climbed to the top of the podium. The teams had played earlier in the year and Unalakleet had won relatively easily but both were sure to see each team's best effort. Contrary to this expectation, both teams came out a little shaky, with service errors and other mistakes creating a sloppy, albeit exciting first set that the Wolfpack won. As the teams settled in it was apparent that the team from Unalakleet was superior and they began to pull away. Towarak continued to rain down "bombs" from all over the court, Corsetti returned from an early match injury to give solid net play and Roberta Walker and Jennie Katchatag provided some awesome defensive plays to keep balls in play. Setter Jonisha Wilson continued her tournament-long successful play, setting up all of the Wolfpack hitters. Unalakleet completed their seasonlong quest with a 3-0 sweep of the Lynx and won their first State Mixed Six Volleyball title.

The Wolfpack racked up several individual awards in addition to the State Championship trophy. All Tournament selections included: Stuart Towarak, Jonisha Wilson and Roberta Walker. Towarak was also named "Top Hitter," Wilson was "Top Setter" and Walker was "Top Defender." Elim's Thomas Amaktoolik was also named to the All Tournament squad.

Nome, BSSD finish wrestling season at State tournament

By Stephen Palmatier

After months of travel, wrestling and a few injuries along the way, the Nome Nanooks and the Bering Strait School District wrestling squads wrapped up their season last weekend in Nikiski at the 1A, 2A, 3A State Wrestling Tournament.

It has been a solid season for the Nanooks and Nome came away with just that, a solid finish at State.

The Nanooks, who finished eighth as a team in the total points, boast one state champion with Emery Booshu who won the 132-pound class. Leif Erikson finished in second place in the 113-pound class. Alex Grey finished in third place in the 98-pound class.

Unalakleet also had a good showing by standout wrestler Shyler Johnson, who finished second in the 182-pound class.

The Bethel Warriors continued their strong dominance all season, taking the tournament with a team total of 187 points. In second place was Kotzebue with 47.5 points behind at 139.5 total points.

With the teams larger in size than Nome and the Bering Strait School District face every year, the question will remain if they are able to compete with them for regional and state titles. With an eighth place finish this year in State, it seems that the Nanooks are not too far away from reaching that goal.

Full results for the championship brackets:

98- Seth Hutchison of Skyview defeated Gavin Maslen of Glennallen in a 10-1 majority. Alex Grey of Nome finished 3rd defeating Tecumseh Hensley of Bethel in a 12-4 majority.

106- Darin Davis of Sitka defeated Gage Hoffman of Bethel in a 46 second pin

113- Brettlyn Reich of Kotzebue defeated Leif Erikson of Nome in a 6-0 decision

120- Dave Towne of Valdez defeated Wesley Gilroy of Anchorage Christian School. Avery Chilak of Bethel finished in 4th place.

126- Anthony Walsh of Grace Christian School defeated Josh Mendenhall of Bethel in a 7-3 decision. Jerome Williams of Napaskiak finished 5th. 132- Emery Booshu of Nome defeated Sam Janorschke of Skyview. Avery Coplin of Bethel finished 3rd with a 5-4 overtime victory over Joe Kohler of New Stuyahok.

138- Scott Hansen of Kotzebue defeated Jaren Sumauang of Sitka with a 9-4 decision

145- Austin Rake of Valdez defeated Cade Schlagel of Dillingham in a 7-0 decision. Noah Roetman of Kotzebue was 3rd with an 18-2 win over Tanner Thomasson of Wrangell

152- Isaac Deaton of Valdez defeated Brayton Lieb of Bethel in a 4-1 decision. Junyor Erikson of Nome finished 6th.

160- Trevour Chavez of Bethel defeated Mark McGregor of Homer in a 5-1 decision. Joshua Roetman of Kotzebue finished 3rd defeating Brandon Hursh of Valdez in a 9-7 decision 170- Mitchell Boord of Sitka defeated Morgan Sauve of Nikiski in a 6-4 decision. Devon Phillips of Kotzebue finished 3rd with a 2:46 pin over Dylan Magnusen of Unalaska

Shingles vaccine may prevent painful rash in older adults

Alaska Family Doctor

A vaccine, called Zostavax, can reduce the risk of shingles in older adults. Experts give differing opinions regarding the best age to receive the vaccine.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration initially approved Zostavax in 2006 for adults age 60 and older. Then in 2011, the approved age was lowered to people 50 and age older after studies showed the vaccine reduced the risk of shingles in.

this age group by up to 69 percent. But the CDC Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices continues to recommend people wait until age 60 to receive the vaccine, largely due to shortages with the initial production of vaccine. This discrepancy between expert organizations may cause confusion between patients and providers. Only you and your medical provider can determine when the vaccine is right for you, but a little background information may help guide the dis-

Shingles is caused by the varicella zoster virus (VZV). Prior to 1995 when a vaccine against VZV in children became available in the United States, most people were exposed to the chicken pox virus in childhood, thereby developing a life-long immunity. Now most children receive the chicken pox vaccine series starting at age one.

After a childhood chicken pox infection or vaccination, most people never suffer from the virus again. However in some people, for unknown reasons, the varicella virus remains dormant within the long nerves of the body until something triggers a localized outbreak of the virus, called shingles.

These outbreaks are usually isolated to the area of skin served by the nerve in which the virus has remained dormant. The outbreak starts as a focal area of pain or burning followed by a characteristic blistering rash over the affected strip of skin. In most cases the pain subsides in 2-10 days, but in a small percentage of patients, the outbreak can lead to a long-term pain syndrome called post-herpetic neural-

Outbreaks usually occur in persons over age 60 with at least 50 percent of people who reach age 85 experiencing at least one attack. Younger people with a weakened immune system caused by illness or immunosuppressive medical therapy may also experience attacks of shingles.

Shingles is treated with antiviral medication and pain medication to reduce the duration and severity of

In theory, the shingles vaccine helps boost the immunity of a person who has had prior VZV expo-

Various studies on the vaccine show that it reduces the incidence of shingles by up to 69 percent and the feared complication of post-herpetic neuralgia by 66.5 percent.

Like many other vaccines, large numbers of people must be vaccinated to realize a benefit in the whole population. It is estimated that up to 220 people have to receive the shingles vaccine to prevent one outbreak of shingles, and 364 people have to receive the vaccine to prevent one case of post-herpetic neuralgia.

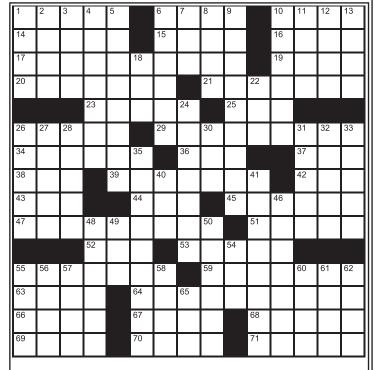

Given that the risks associated with receiving the vaccine are minimal, there is likely little harm in giving the vaccine to large numbers of people; however, because so many have to be immunized to prevent one outbreak, experts debate on whether the vaccine is cost effective.

Vaccines are known to lose their effectiveness over time. This is why some vaccines require a "booster" at certain intervals. The longevity of Zostavax is unknown, but at this time no booster is recommended.

Whether or not the shingles vaccine prevents future outbreaks in a person who has already suffered an attack of shingles is also unknown; however, the Center for Disease Control and Prevention recommends vaccination even if a prior attack has

If you are over age 50, consider speaking with your provider at your next visit about the risks and potential benefits of receiving the shingles

Victor William Goldsberry

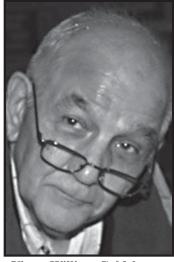

Victor William Goldsberry, born in Lima, Ohio August 14, 1941 to Victor and JoAnne Goldsberry. Victor grew up in Tiffin, Ohio. As a boy he enjoyed animals, fishing and the outdoors more than anything else, except for reading. He was very serious about life and himself; Victor graduated high school in 1959.

After graduation he enrolled in Miami University in Oxford, Ohio for a year then joined the United States Marine Corps where he served his country in active duty from 1961-1963. Returning from the Vietnam War, he continued his studies at Miami University where he obtained his degree in Political Science and English. Victor then bought Mac and Joe's in the Alley, a bar and restaurant in Oxford, Ohio, which he ran for four years. After this brief stint Victor went on to law school at Stetson in Tampa, Florida. In his final year of law school, Victor came to the realization that this was not the life for him; he packed up and moved to Nome in 1969. In Nome, Victor taught History and English at Nome-Beltz Regional High School from the late 1960s to the early 1970s.

In 1976 Victor married Nancy Kunayak; together they had five boys.

Victor taught his sons to commercial fish in the summers and loved going to Council to spend the weekends camping. Victor worked for the State of Alaska as an Employment Specialist then went on to re-

Saying it Sincerely

By Rev. Julia Yoder Elmore

Signs of Christmas are all around us by now in each of our communities. The stores have Christmas decorations, candy, food, presents, and anything we could possibly need for the season. All of these signs point to the fact that Christmas is coming. We have all of these signs, but do they really point us to the One whom Christmas is truly about - Christ? Why did Christ, the Baby, even have to come over two thousand years ago?

The Baby came to restore things to the way God intended when God first created the heavens, earth, humanity and all living things. When humanity disobeyed God by eating of the forbidden fruit, sin entered the world and created a chasm between humanity and God. God loves us so much that God does not wish for that chasm to remain and be separated from us. Instead, God has worked to close that chasm by coming down to earth in the Baby. When humanity did not recognize the Baby, and put him to death on a cross, God continued to love us, showing us mercy and forgiveness when we did not know what we were doing on what we know as Good Friday. God brought us hope on the third day, also known as Easter, when the Baby was resurrected from the dead, narrowing the chasm, though not quite closing it.

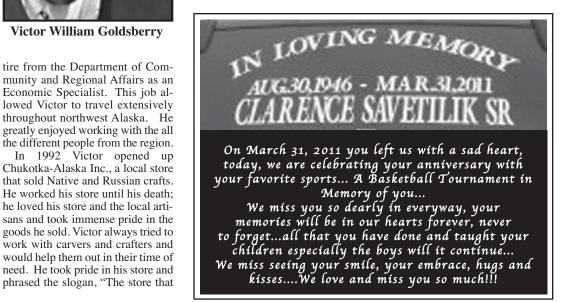

We watch and wait in hope for the Baby to come again in final victory. As we wait, God is at work within us, seeking to draw others closer to God. Just as God showed love and grace through sending the Baby, we are to show love and grace to others, especially to those we do not think deserve it. As we show love and grace, we help to narrow the chasm just a little more. Though brokenness and evil may distract us, we must focus on the hope that all will be well when things are finally restored and the chasm is closed once and for all. Thanks be to God for sending the Baby.

Covenant Church construction design approved

By Sandra L. Medearis

Nome Evangelical Covenant Church building committee left the Nome Planning Commission Dec. 4 with approved plans that required the panel's permission to skirt some parts of the land use law.

The church group wants to rebuild their church at the existing site at Front and Bering streets, using all available land to facilitate a onestory rather than a two-story building with less access to elders. The group, comprising Pastor Harvey Fiskeaux, Lloyd Perrigo and Nathan Nagaruk, has approached the planners several times with a design that showed the building and its various entryways encroaching on lot-line setbacks. City of Nome law requires structures to be setback from adjoining lots by five feet and by 10 feet from public street right-of-ways. The commission denied a variance (permission to go against the law on a case-by-case basis) mainly out of concern for visibility on the busy corner and because the project would be new construction that could be built to code.

The Commission hashed over a new design that had the building within the setbacks with access points taking up part of the margins between the building and the property lines. They voted unanimously to allow the project to go ahead. As it stands, the encroachments are these: four feet into the setback for a ramp on the north side; eight feet into the setback to accommodate stairs coming off a covered entry deck on Bering St.; four feet into lotline setback on east side of building. The commission ruled out a ramp crossing the lot line between the new church and the existing building on the east, to become a youth center.

The site development includes selling or demolishing the Lewis House east of the existing church for church expansion and using the former Arctic Trading Post building for a young people's activity center.

In other business, the Nome Planning Commission voted to pass several measures on to Nome Common Council to pass and enact. A system of zoning violation abatements would split the community into sections for concentrated abatement of violations. The policy would be to split the City into certain areas, number them, and have a lottery to pick out a number. The City would then begin abatement proceedings of all violations in the area. When all the violations had been resolved or were underway, another area would be likewise selected for attention. Violations under scrutiny, according to a memo drawn up by city planner Eileen Bechtol, according to desires of the commission, would fall under health, safety and welfare; planning and development; building and construction; streets, sidewalks and public places; and zoning

The commission also passed forward to the Council a plan for City enforcement and bail schedule. The measure would transfer fines for violation of municipal ordinance imposing penalties to City coffers when a person forfeited, pleaded no contest, pleaded guilty or was convicted of the infraction.

nity to be our eyes and ears as frequently, the police department is otherwise engaged.

Regardless, what is obviously missing from this mix is 'drug information.' It should not be a shock to anyone in the community to learn that all of Alaska has a significant drug issue. Nome is not unique in this regard. There are people in our community who make a living off of the suffering endured by others. Whether this is in terms of the actual user who is compelled by addiction to seek drugs, the family of the user who worries constantly whether their loved one will survive the day, the person who is victimized while under the influence of drugs — or by somebody who is under the influence, or the suffering endured by a young person who's entire life is destroyed because of the choice to use drugs; it makes no difference. Drugs are a scourge to this community. They have no positive social value and do not promote positive behaviors.

So I ask myself, "Why does the community put up with this?" Surely, the members of the community know who is selling drugs — the heroin that is all over the west coast of Alaska comes from somewhere; the marijuana that was seized from an 11- and 12-year-old at the Elementary School came from somewhere. But except for the occasional anonymous letter, your police department receives almost no input from the community about drugs.

Having been a career law enforcement officer, I have seen the impact of drugs throughout our state. There are many who will argue that drugs are a victimless crime. I would challenge anyone to look into the eyes of a grieving parent, whose child is brain dead because of an overdose and tell them there are no victims. Look at the homeless street person who will do anything for their next high, including robbery and murder and say there are no victims. And take a glance at the young girls and boys, who sell themselves to get their next high and shout to the world that there are no victims. Only you can choose what to believe.

Those who exploit others to their own ends deserve no protection. By remaining mute, our community is tacitly allowing this behavior to occur. Many times I have people approach me and want to give me vague details about drug activity, but don't want to "get involved" or have their names come up in an investigation. I appreciate their desire to talk to me, but would cherish the opportunity for members of the community to bring me some real-time solid information and more so, for them to stand shoulder-to-shoulder with me as a drug dealer is taken out of circulation where they are done selling misery to others. If you think these people care about you, then you

I was recently going through the evidence room and came across nearly $10,000 from a drug case. That's a drop in the bucket to the profitability a drug dealer sees. This weekend, a person of no obvious means was found to have nearly $6,000 on his person, most likely from drug related activity. There are people in our community who have nice cars, ATVs, houses – but don't have jobs. How do you think they afford these luxuries?

If you think that those who sell drugs are not notorious criminals, think gain. Whether it's tax evasion or victimizing others in so many ways: those who deal drugs care only about themselves. And for all the parents who are using drugs, ask yourself, "Is this the life you want your children to lead?"

It's time to ask some difficult questions.

But it is also time to find some answers.

NOME HIGH SCHOOL CHOIR- Conducted by Ron Horner, the Nome High School Choir performed a Nome rendition of the "Twelve Days of Christmas."

Christmas Extravaganza brings the holiday spirit to Nome

By Diana Haecker

There are a few traditions that shouldn't be missed when living in Nome. One of them is the annual Christmas Extravaganza organized by the City of Nome, specifically Laura Samuelson and Cheryl Thompson of the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum. Old St. Joe's Hall was decked in seasonal decorations last Wednesday ready to receive the big crowd that turned out for an evening of music, performances and a special appearance by Old St. Nick himself.

Museum director Laura Samuelson greeted Nomeites with the jolly jingle of sleigh bells and then handed the microphone to emcee Richard Beneville. Nome Elder Dan Karmun, Sr. gave the invocation and treated the crowd to a couple of songs played on his accordion.

Beneville then started the countdown for the lighting of the gigantic Christmas tree. Children's eyes got big and round when the lights went on and made the tree sparkle in its full glory.

Next came the Nome High School Band and the Nome High School Choir performing a medley of Christmas carols as well as a Nome version of the "12 Days of Christmas." Ron Horner conducted.

Jackie Reader, accompanied by her mother Mary Reader on the piano, sang "Baby Lying in a Manger."

Linda Kimoktoak introduced the High School Cultural Dance Group, a group of Nome-Beltz juniors who have formed to learn regional Siberian Yupik and Inupiaq dances after school. They performed several dances to the delight of the crowd and earned a big round of applause.

Also a new addition to the program was the sound of the Caribbean with the Steel Drums of Anvil City Science Academy conducted by Teresa Gartung. Christmas never sounded so sunny as the rhythm of the steel drums and bongos brought images of sandy beaches and warm ocean waves to one's mind.

Sarah Hofstetter and her husband Phil together with Dave Coler performed "A Box of Candles."

Then the big moment came as Santa Claus arrived with a sack full of candy canes. To the tune of "Here Comes Santa Claus," Santa marched in with Mrs. Claus, sat down on his throne next to the Christmas tree and received a whole line of children to ask them if they have been good or bad. Some were eager to meet Santa, while others were terrified and clung to their mommies' arms. But in the end, everybody walked away with a candy cane and a big smile.

Outside, Nome kids had the chance to meet the reindeer Velvet Eyes, who posed willingly alongside her owner Carl Emmons for photos.

Spot closure program in Alternative 3. Specifically, highlight impacts on western Alaska chum instead of all chum salmon.

3. Describe in an analysis of Alternative 4 the inherent weakness of using a triggered closure based on historical data. This approach assumes that chum salmon, Chinook salmon and pollock will return to the same grounds at the same time every year. Such an approach may cause closure of areas of low bycatch and force the fleet into an area of high bycatch such as happened under the old Salmon Savings Area closures.

4. Streamline the document, including a more narrowed focus on the three priorities identified in the problem statement: impacts on western Alaska chum salmon, Chinook and the pollock fishery.

Council chairman Eric Olson emphasized that all alternatives in the current initial review draft of Bering Sea chum salmon bycatch management measures will remain open for consideration and that proposals requested from the pollock fishery sectors will be analyzed and presented to the public for review.

Coverage of issues related to the analysis of chum bycatch measures, including public comments at the council meeting will continue next week in the Nugget.

Council sets pollock TAC

The council set the annual Total Allowable Catch of eastern Bering Sea pollock at 1.247 million metric tons for 2013 and 2014, an increase of 47,000 metric tons compared to a pollock TAC of 1.2 million metric tons in 2012. The Allowable Biological Catch for the fishery is 1.375 million metric tons in 2013 and 1.43 million metric tons in 2014.

The Bering Sea/Aleutian Islands Pacific cod TAC also increased from 231,682 metric tons in 2012 to 260,000 metric tons in 2013 and to 260,880 metric tons in 2014. The ABC for Pacific cod totals 307,000 metric tons in 2013 and 323,000 metric tons in 2014.

Low pay, high cost of living send Nome police packing

By Sandra L. Medearis

News for the guilty of conscience: Nome isn't exactly crawling with cops.

Nome Police Dept. currently is down to four officers on the street and a fifth on Workers' Comp leave. Two Community Service Officers are helping to pick up the slack.

Why would that be?

Nome is short of police casting a tall shadow on main street and in the nooks and crannies of crime for a big handful of good reasons, according to Police Chief John Papasodora: low pay, housing costs, remote town, less than better benefits paid elsewhere and high cost of living—70 percent higher overall than South Central Alaska.

As an example, based on Papa-sodora's figures, food for a family of four in Anchorage for a week costs $170.64, in Nome, $308.53; heating oil per gallon in Anchorage, $3.79, in Nome, $6.25; electricity, about twice the cost in Nome compared to Anchorage.

The starting salary for Police Officer I candidates effective Jan. 1 this year was $25.54 per hour, or $4,086 per 160-hour work month.

Sgt. Ian Koenig moved on to Soldotna earlier this month.

Another officer is set to leave

"We're going to have to give them something to keep them," Papasodora told Nome Common Council at last week's work session on Friday, Dec. 13.

They could make the same salary elsewhere, but with lower cost of living and enjoy a larger margin for disposable income.

Council members vowed to take a productive look at the issue.

Papasadora handed out a "white paper" on the issue to guide them on ENDEARING REINDEER— Velvet Eyes, the reindeer, and her human companion Carl Émmons just got done shopping at AC for Velvet's dinner. The two formed a lifelong friendship after she was taken in by the Emmons family of Nome.

A Nome reindeer story: Velvet Eyes is proud to be a famous pet

By Diana Haecker

One of the most famous citizens of Nome is not a person but a reindeer who thinks she's a person.

TV crews make films about her. Professional photographers from Outside don't leave without a photo of Velvet Eyes in their cameras.

Christmas Extravaganza in awe of a real reindeer next to her human companion Carl Emmons.

For Nomeites, Velvet Eyes is a fact of life in Nome. It's not unusual to see Emmons drive his pickup around town, with the reindeer in the back of the truck. Nobody does a double take when he walks her around at the power plant or during spring cleanup events at Anvil City Square.

Velvet Eyes was named after a children's book that Carl Emmons' wife Ginny had as a little girl. She still has the book and explained that her life-long dream of having a pet reindeer was inspired by this book. The book cover is bright red, with the drawing of a big-eyed reindeer called Velvet Eyes.

And here begins the real life story of Nome's Velvet Eyes, the soft-eyed reindeer.

For years, Carl Emmons had been curious about raising orphaned reindeer. He asked his childhood friend Tom Gray what it would take to do

Tom Gray owns a reindeer herd near White Mountain. One day in May of 2001, he called up Carl Emmons and said, "How many do you want?"

Gray's herd had run-off and left several newborn fawns behind.

Velvet Eyes was one of them. Emmons hopped into his airplane and flew to White Mountain.

"She wasn't able to stand," Emmons recalled.

He scooped up the one-day old fawn and flew her home to Nome.

"I didn't know what we were getting into," said Ginny Emmons.

Safe Routes to School plan is in the making

By Diana Haecker

Nome Elementary Schools students who walk or bike to school have to contend with a lot of obstacles every morning. Among the hazards they encounter are that there are no sidewalks they can use.

K Street is busier than ever in the morning with hospital employees traveling by car, foot or bike to the new Norton Sound Regional Hospital on Greg Kruschek Avenue. In dry fall conditions, kicked up street dust obscures the little pedestrians so motorists see them only at the last minute.

In the winter, snow berms and slippery road conditions pose another hazard. Light conditions along K Street, Fifth Avenue and Sixth Avenue are dim: on the north side of the school, it's completely dark.

When pedestrians and cars dropping off students at the school's parking lot converge, the daily chaos is complete.

To mitigate some of the problems, the NES has dispatched two crossing guards to the parking lot to direct foot traffic to the main entrance and to control the flow of drop-off cars at the entrance curb.

But the need for a more organized pattern is clear.

A few years ago, the Parent Teacher Association approached Nome Eskimo Community to apply for a Safe Routes to School planning grant, from the State of Alaska's Department of Transportation and Pub-

Dear Editor,

What's wrong with this picture? Are many of our elected officials socially deaf, dumb and blind? Do they not have eyes to see with, ears to hear with, and a brain to think with? Or could it be that they have discarded their consciences, abandoned their souls, and lost their ability to adhere to The Golden Rule?

Out of sight, out of mind, just does not hold water when we are talking about veterans freezing out in the streets, whole families pinned-up in bleak homeless shelters, and even children who have been stripped of even basic medical needs, and this by politicians who have no idea (or concern) for what it is like to be without hope or prospects!

And yet through all of this and more, many of those elected politicians who are gifted with an exceptionally good life by way of the taxes that are paid each and every day, look down their noses at the less than fortunate!

Have we grown so cold or so immune at the sight of such hardship, that we now have adopted the immortal words of Marie Antoinette (If the people have no bread to eat, then let them eat cake)! Or worse yet, do we now feel like Ebenezer Scrooge,

"If our people have no place to go, are there no work houses or debtors prisons?

Dear Editor and Nome,

The Shirley Tree is standing outside the Nome Youth Facility awaiting your decorations. As ever, you are invited to place a tribute to one you want to remember, one you've lost, one you've found, one you grieve for, one who has brought joy into your life, one who has fought the good fight, one you're fighting for, one you have hope for, the soldiers and peace officers past and present who have given and are willing to give their lives for you and us, for the forgotten and unsung ones who have added to your lives.

The Shirley Tree is a Promise. A promise to remember. A promise to live and forgive. A promise to celebrate life. It is dedicated to and named after Shirley Noet who fought her cancer with bravery and humor and tenacity. She was such a joyful friend and such an amazing, selfless contributor to this community.

Add your decoration on the Shirley Tree and help make it the most beautiful tree in Nome, full of your remembrances. As always, the Shirley Tree will be added to the Nome National Forest at Iditarod.

Having the Shirley Tree at the Youth Facility is not only convenient to everyone but it also demonstrates caring and love to the residents there, some of whom feel forgotten themselves.

Thank You, Jana Varrati Nome, AK

Foster's Report

By Rep. Neal Foster District 39

Greetings and happy holidays to everyone in District 39. The Legislative Session starts next month on the 21st. There has been a lot of speculation about what is going to dominate our time this year. My prediction is it's all about the budget.

The Fall Revenue Forecast came out this month. While it was not exactly a lump of coal it certainly wasn't good news. Unrestricted Revenue for this fiscal year (FY 14) is down $1.8 billion. In April the Department of Revenue forecasted $6.7 billion UR. This fall's forecast is for $4.9 billion UR. Keep in mind that this is for the year we have already budgeted. Based on the Spring

Forecast, which came out just before we passed the FY 14 budget, we expected to have a $667 million deficit. The official number on the new deficit is not out just yet, but we can bet it will be in the $2 billion territory.

The factors driving this are numerous. Production and prices of oil are down about 3 percent and 5percent respectively. Additionally, the new tax reform (More Alaska Production Act-MAPA) will take effect halfway through this fiscal year. The Spring Forecast did not take this into account, but the Fall Forecast does. According to the department, this only accounts for $200-$300 million of the lost revenue. Since this only affects half of the fiscal year, we could expect that number to be double

How the Grinch Stole Channel 2

The battle between GCI and KTUU Channel 2 leaves us wondering what's going on. And what won't be on. Search the dial all we want but the space that used to host Channel 2 is now filled with insipid 1970s B rated movies. But wait, wait there's more and more and more "Frosty the Snowman," "Rudolph the Red-nosed Reindeer" and "Charlie Brown's Christmas" and on and on. Folks who want to watch Channel 2 news can go to the ARCS channel 14 where some of the time they can see Channel 2 and where some of the time it is another broadcast of Channel 11.

It gets interesting when one thinks they will see Channel 2 and instead they tune into a weird vampire movie. Sunday afternoon football fans who want to see the Steelers - Bengals game are out of luck. They will get to hear the Mormon Tabernacle Choir's Christmas program. In general, the selections available on TV are about as exciting as last week's meatloaf. The reality shows are cheap to produce and of limited quality. The talent shows are insulting and make us long for the old Ed Sullivan Show. We can see Lawrence Welk on Channel 7. The comedy shows aren't very funny and the intellectual level does not merit a bored ho-hum.

GCI, lighten up. Channel 11 is not God's gift to TV land. However. this power game is good for our health because it provides an incentive for those of us who would rather enjoy a good book, take a walk, or go to the pool or the gym for a workout. — N.L.M.—

Oiled birds wash up on St. Lawrence Island

The Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation reports that subsistence hunters found two dead, oil-covered glaucous gulls 12 miles offshore from Gambell on December 10. The cause of the birds' death and the source of the oil is unknown at this time. No oil slick or pollution incident was reported in the vicinity of where the birds were found. The hunters retrieved one bird and sent it to Nome's Marine Advisory Program agent. The bird was then sent to the National Wildlife Health Center in Madison, Wisconsin for a necropsy. On Dec. 12, the US Coast Guard launched a C-130 reconnaissance flight from Kodiak to survey the waters around St. Lawrence Island, but no oil slick or oiled wildlife was found during the overflight. ADEC said in a press release that they will continue to monitor the situation.

Arctic Policy Commission met in Anchorage

Last week, the Alaska Arctic Policy Commission convened in Anchorage at the Dena'ina Center to continue their work on a preliminary report delineating Alaska's Arctic policy.

The commissioners worked on a vision statement, a list of statements encapsulating Alaska's Arctic policy and recommendations for federal and state governmental actions.

Members focused on policy recommendations and priorities for a preliminary report due to the Legislature on January 30, 2014. The recommendations were made in areas such as energy, infrastructure, governance, science and research, fish and wildlife, oil spill response operations, national security and marine transportation.

The Alaska Arctic Policy Commission is made up of 26 Commissioners, including 10 legislators and 16 experts from throughout the state. Nome Mayor Denise Michels is also a commissioner.

The AAPC has met this year in Juneau, Barrow, Unalaska, Fairbanks and Anchorage.

"I was pleased with how the Commission came together and shaped this draft report. The report is critical in positively guiding federal Arctic policy and working toward the goal that Alaskans will have a seat at the table when decisions which will change our future are made," said Representative Bob Herron. One of the most important aspects of the AAPC's work will be to positively influence federal Arctic policy so that the needs of Alaskans come first.

The Alaska Arctic Policy Commission was legislatively created by HCR 23 in April 2012. It held its first meeting March 23, 2013.

The Commission's Preliminary Report will be released January 30, 2014 in Juneau. The final report is due in January 2015.

Alaska Board of Marine Pilots fines Greenpeace

Following an investigation in response to a public complaint the Board of Marine Pilots fined the MV Esperanza $15,000 for entering Alaska compulsory pilotage waters in the vicinity of Point Hope between July 22 through 27, 2012. As a foreign-flagged vessel larger than 65 feet, state law requires the presence of a state-licensed marine pilot on board for transit through Alaska's compulsory pilotage waters. Entering compulsory waters without a pilot is a criminal violation and is subject to fines up to $15,000 for the first violation and $30,000 for the second violation. Due to lack of compliance with Alaska statues and regulations, the Board of Marine Pilots unanimously voted to impose the fine at their October 2013 meet-

Arctic report card shows warming frend persists

According to a new report released last week by NOAA, cooler temperatures in the summer of 2013 across the central Arctic Ocean, Greenland and northern Canada moderated the record sea ice loss and extensive melting that the surface of the Greenland ice sheet experienced last year. Yet there continued to be regional extremes, including record low May snow cover in Eurasia and record high summer temperatures in

The data was presented as NOAA's Arctic Report Card 2013, which has, since 2006, summarized changing conditions in the Arctic. One hundred forty-seven authors from 14 countries contributed to the peer-reviewed report. Major findings of this year's report include:

- Air temperatures: While Eurasia had spring air temperatures as much as 7°F above normal, central Alaska experienced its coldest April since 1924 with birch and aspen trees budding the latest since observations began in 1972. Summer across a broad swath of the Arctic was cooler than the previous six summers, when there had been pronounced retreat of sea ice. But Fairbanks, just below the Arctic Circle in Alaska, experienced a record 36 days of temperatures at or exceeding 80°F.
- Snow cover: The snow extent in May and June across the Northern Hemisphere, when snow is mainly located over the Arctic, was below average in 2013. The North American snow cover during this period was the fourth lowest on record. A new record low was reached in May over Eurasia.
- Age of ice at the end of March 1988 compared to March 2013, Category 1 is first year ice—ice that has survived one summer melt season. In March 2013 at the winter maximum, 78 percent of the Arctic ice pack was only one year old, while only 7 percent was four years and older, thick ice. Despite a relatively cool summer over the Arctic Ocean, the extent of sea ice in September 2013 was the sixth lowest since observations began in 1979. The seven lowest recorded sea ice extents have occurred in the last seven years.
- Ocean temperature and salinity: Sea surface temperatures in August were as much as 7°F higher than the long-term average of 1982-2006 in the Barents and Kara Seas, which can be attributed to an early retreat of sea ice cover and increased solar heating. Twenty-five percent more heat and freshwater is stored in the Beaufort Gyre, a clockwise ocean current circulating north of Alaska and Canada, since the 1970s.
- · Vegetation: The Arctic is greening as vegetation responds to warmer conditions and a longer growing season. Since observations began in 1982. Arctic-wide tundra vegetation productivity (greenness) has increased, with the growing season length increasing by 9 days each

- Wildlife: Large land mammal populations continued trends seen over the last several decades. Muskox numbers have increased since the 1970s, in part due to conservation and introduction efforts, while caribou and reindeer herds continue to have unusually low num-
- Marine fishes: The long-term warming trend, including the loss of sea ice and warming of waters, is believed to be contributing to the northward migration into the Arctic of some fish such as Atlantic mackerel. Atlantic cod, capelin, eelpout, sculpin and salmonids.
 - Black carbon: While black carbon originating from outside the Arctic has decreased by 55 percent since the early 1990s, primarily due to economic collapse in the former Soviet Union, increasing numbers of wildfires fueled by greater amounts of vegetation in a warmer, drier climate, have the potential to increase atmospheric black carbon in the high latitudes.

"The Arctic Report Card presents strong evidence of widespread, sustained changes that are driving the Arctic environmental system into a new state and we can expect to see continued widespread and sustained change in the Arctic," said Martin Jeffries, principal editor of the 2013 Report Card, science adviser for the U.S. Arctic Research Commission, and research professor at the Univer-

Glycol spilled at Norton Sound Hospital

By Nancy McGuire

Late Sunday morning, December 15, a heating pipeline ruptured at Norton Sound Regional Hospital and spilled over 600 gallons of propylene glycol into the Norton Sound Hospital parking lot near the southeast employees' entrance.

This substance is used in the heating system. The boilers at the hospital were shut down and restarted after the hospital maintenance crew was able to stop the leak.

It was said that the Nome police and fire departments were on site.

However members of the fire department say they were never paged out and the police department has no record of being called to the scene. The City offices had no knowledge of the incident as of Monday afternoon.

As of Monday evening, Norton Sound did not respond to the Nugget's questions.

The glycol is being cleaned up and traffic to the area is diverted.

This type of glycol is biodegradable and non-toxic.

their thinking.

"Exactly what are you asking?" offered Councilman Tom Sparks.

Well, for instance, said the Chief, a relocation bonus, based on a three-year commitment.

Right now, "we are a training ground," Papasodora said, meaning green policemen come to work, get training, go through the academy in Sitka, get experience on their resumes and then leave for better pay, better bennies, lower cost of living and urban conditions.

Additionally, "we can work on upward mobility," Papasodora said.

Added to that, a monthly housing stipend of $200 per month would help, on top of help getting to Nome with their families to take the job, he said

"Some come up without their families. The separation becomes a stressor and incentive to leave," he said.

There is no local interest in working for Nome Police Dept., Papasodora told the Council. Shift work and the heavy responsibility stifles local applications. He hoped a boost in pay and benefits, opportunity for upward mobility in the job would help attract local hire.

Currently, almost all new hires come from outside the community.

Out-of-town applicants have to pay a steep price for airline tickets and then find an apartment with a large rent and deposit right off, Papasodora observed. Add to that, shipment of household goods, initial utility costs and basic transportation costs may cost a new recruit $5,000 or more.

Even when one adds the COLA for police officers to the pay scale, police get less than other professionals in the community, according to Papasodora. Based on his research, police officers are in a different category from many other employees. Recruitment demands they take a polygraph test and deep background check. Out of 70 applicants, five or six may qualify for hire, Papasodora said.

Few can pass the testing required by the Alaska Police Standards Council.

Hiring a "new" officer can take three months or more due to the complexity of the process.

Training a new officer can take most of the first year of employment.

Upon achieving "basic" APSC certification (after 12 months of work), "new" hires are then eligible for lateral transfer into other agencies that offer better pay, urban conditions, and lower cost of living which means more disposable income

Mayor Denise Michels suggested that perhaps the NPD and City could do a subset in the collective bargaining agreement to provide different working conditions for NPD personnel.

Nothing doing, the chief replied. "Last time I talked about that, I was threatened by the union with an injunctive relief citation," he said.

The Council will discuss police personnel retention in a work session.

"If we are going to incentivize outside hire, we need to do the same for local hires," Councilman Tom Sparks said.

Looking at making the job attractive to local applicants involves measurable and predictable monetary issues," Papasodora said.

"Yes, we need to see the budget costs." Michels said.

NOME'S OWN— Who knew that Mr. and Mrs. Santa Claus are living in Nome with their pet reindeer Velvet Eyes?

ADF&G has fun facts on Santa's Reindeer

The Alaska Department of Fish and Game has updated its webpage with information about Santa's reindeer.

Visitors to the site can find a full species profile of this unusual subspecies.

Santa's reindeer (Rangifer tarandus saintnicolas magicalus) look very similar to common reindeer or caribou, but have many characteristics—including the ability to fly—that distinguish them from the seven other common subspecies.

In Europe, caribou are called reindeer, but in Alaska and Canada only the semi-domesticated form is called reindeer. All caribou and reindeer throughout the world are considered to be the same species, and, including Santa's reindeer, there are eight subspecies.

Alaska has mostly the barren-ground subspecies and one small herd of woodland caribou.

Santa's reindeer are cared for by Mr. and Mrs. Claus, as well as a few specially trained elves, at the North Pole. Even though there are very few Santa's reindeer, they are not listed as a threatened or endangered species because their life expectancy is infinite.

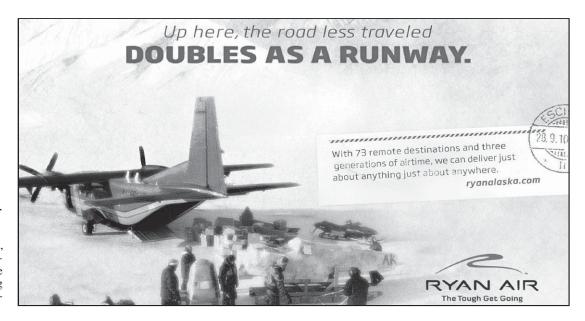

Only a few facts are known about Santa's reindeer as they are more often heard than seen. Every Christmas Eve, sharp-eared children may detect the faint sound of harness bells and hoofbeats on rooftops. Department researchers encourage everyone to record observations and document sightings so that we can learn more about this rare subspecies.

More information about Santa's reindeer is available on the Alaska Department of Fish & Game website at www.adfg.alaska.gov/index.cfm?adfg=santasreindeer.main.

lic Facilities. The grant was awarded this summer. NEC began to build a coalition to come up with a plan to outline the problems and propose solutions.

After two meetings with coalition members, NEC hosted an open house meeting last week to hear thoughts from the general public. Only a dozen people attended, including officials from the DOT, NES and the Norton Sound injury prevention program.

NEC Executive Director Denise Barengo said that NEC has retained planner Nicole McCullough of Anchorage.

The good news is, Barengo said, a lot of the issues like poor lighting can be easily fixed and are inexpensive solutions. After the problem of the dimly lighted NES parking lot came up, Nome Joint Utilities immediately installed an additional light. Other issues are vehicle congestions, no clear traffic pattern at the parking lot and no signage. "Kids are not being visible," added McCullough. This, Kendra Nichols-Takak tried to solve by organizing reflector tape sessions at the school, where students brought jackets and had reflective tape ironed on

During parent-teacher conferences the school distributed surveys to learn more about how students get to school. McCullough said that only 56 surveys were turned in, but she learned that many parents don't let their kids walk or bike to school because of the danger at the intersections, darkness and the distance from home to school.

Part of the solution should be to encourage kids to wear reflectors and headlamps.

There is also a need to educate the driving public and to develop a Nome safety education program.

McCullough suggested creating a Nome safety video and to publish

Nome-specific safety tips community-wide.

In order to have more enforcement or help to get kids across the busy K Street and Fifth Avenue intersection, it was suggested to place a crossing guard there and also at the crossing from the parking lot to Nugget Alley.

Other ideas included to put flashing lights a block around the schoo;l to notify drivers that they are in a school zone; to apply more gravel at the intersections to prevent cars from sliding; to construct sidewalks on the main routes to school; to increase lighting and to provide better signage at school bus stops.

Those were the easy solutions, but to come up with a traffic flow design at the NES parking lot and drop-off curb and entrance proved more complicated.

No data is available on how many cars arrive at the school to drop off students and how many pedestrians make the trip to NES every morning. Currently there are 385 students at the Nome Elementary School, said NES Principal Robert Grimes. Of those, 45 kids participate in early morning fitness and breakfast snack programs before school starts.

Toward the end of the meeting, McCullough discussed three alternatives of directing traffic at drop off zones.

Alternative #1 provides for cross walks and more light at the K Street and Fifth Avenue intersection and also establishes the middle of the parking lot as a pedestrian only zone. However, it's unclear how traffic enters and leaves the parking lot if a pedestrian only zone runs right through it.

Alternative #2 moves the current drop-off zone at the main entrance to a side entrance on Sixth Avenue and makes the drop off one way. Arguments against the alternative were that the north side of NES has no streetlights and that it moves the problem to a public road.

Alternative #3 proposes to unload school buses at the main entrance and to have parents drop off their kids at a small side entrance adjacent to the playground on Fifth Avenue.

McCullough said, there would be another meeting to present the plan to the public for final comment. After the plan is done and solutions identified, there are other grants that NEC pursued to fund for the solutions to make the trip to school safer for Nome Elementary School students.

kitchen table. The first pages show a tiny four-legged reindeer on the tundra, in a small airplane and inside the kitchen, being bottle-fed by Ginny. A paper preserved in the book lists the feeding schedule: 4 oz at 5 a.m.; 4 oz at noon, 4 oz at 5 p.m. and so on. The reindeer research program at the University of Alaska at Fairbanks and its director Greg Finstad helped with tips, advice and sent a food formula to feed little Velvet. The first month, Velvet was bottle-fed a special formula of cow's milk and commercial calf feed. After a month of bottle-feeding her, the Emmons' let her graze on the rich buffet the tundra has to offer.

She imprinted quickly on Carl Emmons and never lets him out of her sight. Emmons admitted that at first he thought reindeer are just "dumb herd animals" but her adaptability and willingness to learn showed him differently. Velvet, a sight to behold with her full set of antlers, is not one to be cuddled by just anyone. She's focused on Emmons, just like a loyal dog, her eyes follow the "master" and what he's up to.

When she was little, Emmons said, he put on a different colored Carharrt jacket one day and that freaked her out. Who's that guy in the black instead of tan coat?

But soon she learned more than the average pet dog knows. Ginny Emmons custom-sewed her a harness to pull a little cart. The reindeer, although not completely house broken, grew up with the black lab Niki and the cocker spaniel Dixie.

Photos show the little reindeer sprawled out on the living room floor with the dogs, or even sharing the couch. She even learned how to answer the doorbell. Velvet usually lives in an enclosure next to the Emmon's house in Nome. She has a barn, with Christmas lights and all.

Her name is spelled out in a light display, next to the shed antlers that adorn the chain link fence.

However, she'd rather be inside with the people than outside in her barn. "She thinks of herself as a deprived person," said Emmons.

When it comes to food, she is clearly the boss, dominating the food bowl and pushing away the dog with her antlers. She learned how to drink out of the water spigot of the refrigerator. She jumps into the truck, just like a dog, and doesn't mind a ride in a sled hitched up to a snowmachine. The reindeer accepts whatever Em-mons asks of her and even feels comfortable riding in a riverboat.

"When she was small, she'd ride in the cab of the truck," said Emmons. Then she graduated to the back of the truck. But one day, she fell out of the vehicle and required major surgery by Nome's vet Dr. Derrick Leedy to reconstruct her face and jaw. She recovered fully and can eat without problems.

So, what does a domesticated reindeer eat? In the mornings, Emmons cuts up apples for her. Not only humans are creatures of habit, and if the apples don't show up at 8 a.m. on weekends, she sometimes starts honking. In the evening she gets her main meal consisting of lettuce, tomatoes, and whatever the local grocery store AC has sorted out for her.

She eats tundra when the Emmons family spends time at camp in Cottonwood, and she gets moss when she's not feeling so well. "You know reindeer are the perfect environmentalists, they don't overgraze one area," Emmons said. Watching them graze, he said, the reindeer never completely grazes down one spot of

LUNCH TIME— Carl Emmons delivers the goods to Velvet at lunch.

In Nome, come noontime, Velvet knows it's time to go for a ride. She jumps into the truck and Emmons takes her to AC to pick up their grocery box full of discarded fruit, vegetables and lettuce. He explained that reindeer have four stomachs, and her digestion depends on whatever bacteria are in those rumens, so wild variations in her diet are not desirable.

Waiting outside of AC, her eyes are fixed on the door. But with one eye, she suspiciously views the big lense on the camera that tries to take photos of her. Her eyes widen, show the white and then she puts the head down in a gesture that tells the stranger to "get."

Emmons said reindeer communicate with their eyes. And both of them have that language mastered. As soon as Emmons exits AC with a cart full of veggies, her eyes soften and follow every movement.

Going through Velvet's photo album, there are pictures of the reindeer fawn growing up, laying on the couch at camp, pulling carts around town and at parades; of Carl Emmons relaxing on the couch with Velvet in one arm, and Dixie, the dog in the other. "I'm her family," he said. "She won't let me get away." When she wants something from Carl, he said, she puts her face close to his and directly looks at him. When it's time to go outside for a bathroom break, she presses her antlers sideways on his feet. And she's a good sport getting all dressed up in suit and tie when attending parties at the Lawyers' offices.

Although the bond is strong, the Emmons' do get to go on a vacation once in a while. But upon the return, her master is met with a cold shoulder and a pouting look.

Her favorite things to do, Emmons said, is to go for a walk and to pick blue berries. "She goes through phases when she wants to lead me around," said Emmons. That's the female instinct, since reindeer herds-like wild mustang herds are led by females.

And what's in it for the person? Carl Emmons said that Velvet Eyes gets him outside and out into the country. But seeing the affection both have for each other, it seems like Carl is just as much family to Velvet as the 12-year-old reindeer is

ANTHC and local partners conduct regional climate change assessment

By Diana Haecker

The Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium, Kawerak Inc. and Norton Sound Health Corporation are working on a regional climate change assessment to compile a report that documents the effects of climate change on the health of the land, subsistence resources and people.

The goal is to identify impacts of climate change on several communities in the Bering Strait and Norton Sound region.

"We are trying to identify both the positive and negative impacts and to encourage planning and practices that will improve community health and sustainability," said Michael Brubaker ANTHC's Center for Climate Health director. The information gleaned from the assessment will feed into planning considerations as ANTHC helps villages build water and sewer and other infrastructure in rural communities.

Last summer, Kawerak Inc.'s Ahnama Shannon, Jennifer Demir with NSHC and Michael Brubaker made site visits to White Mountain, Golovin St. Michael and Stebbins. Brubaker also went to Unalakleet. They looked at the community water systems and other infrastructure installations as well as sites, shorelines and riverbanks prone to erosion, flooding and sinkholes from thawing permafrost.

They found evidence of a changing climate in different manifestations. At a site called Kitchavik near Golovin, the 2011 November storm wreaked havoc with subsistence camps. Jumbled up lake ice pushed onto land and scraped buildings off their foundations, destroyed fish racks and deposited sands onto berry patches. Also, the old landfill at Golovin is eroding away.

In White Mountain, people were mostly worried about the increase in spruce beetles and other kinds of insects that are new to the area, said Shannon.

In St. Michael and Stebbins, the worst problems are erosion and flooding. A stark fact is that old cemeteries at St. Michael and Golovin are at risk to be washed away as erosion progresses to formerly safe sites.

Next year, more visits are planned for Shishmaref, with hopes of getting to other communities such as Teller and Brevig Mission.

The two-year project started in Brubaker said in addition to local observations, the report will include region specific science, climate trends from UAF and also flood data from FEMA. "We don't want to be only describing what has happened and what is happening, but we want also provide a basis for future actions," Brubaker said.

He said they found in every community examples where climate change is affecting water systems, food supply and, in some cases, affecting the residents' health. "People are talking about seasonality because of the delay of cold winter conditions and a longer warm season," he said. People describe more variability in berry harvest from extremely good conditions to extremely bad conditions. "We hear of new species moving in, for example, in Golovin they see a large increase in beaver population in rivers. They see increased size and growth of willows. This provides habitat for porcupines, beavers and moose, but tundra plants are retreating," Brubaker described.

Unpredictable weather also brings food security concerns: people are worried about how weather conditions affect land and marine mammal migrations. If bad weather conditions, such as the wet and warm first weeks of December, keep hunters from hunting and fishermen from setting their nets under the ice, people must find ways to adapt. But how can people predict the unpredictable and prepare for failing hunting seasons?

Brubaker also connects the dots to mental health implications, that the climate change can not only bring more dangerous conditions in which hunters can get hurt, but also cause anxiety and stress on how to provide food for their families.

Brubaker said that these assessments offer valuable insights about the need to develop new technologies. For example, thawing permafrost and sinking land result in breaking water systems. "We now know that we need to adapt and construct flexible infrastructure. "Right now there is a lot of learning going on," Brubaker said.

Climate change assessments have been done for Point Hope, Kivalina, Noatak, Kiana and Selawik. The detailed description of the effects of climate change are valuable as tribes try to address those problems and pursue grants. "Where we've done those assessments, the tribal administrators can tear a page out of the report and add it to their grant request," said Brubaker.

Noatak addressed their permafrost thawing problem and are about to redesign their water system. In Selawik, the University of Alaska at Fairbanks installed a climate station to monitor the thawing of permafrost.

In Kivalina, ANTHC began a new feasibility study of their water system.

The Bering Strait climate assessment report is focusing on more than just one community and is a regional report. Brubaker hopes to finish the report by the fall of 2014.

Brubaker also initiated the socalled Local Environmental Observer (LEO) Network with the goal of long term monitoring of environmental conditions.

Brubaker works with tribal environmental managers to install timelapse cameras in communities to record conditions and changes in vulnerable locations. "In Golovin and St. Michael they are focusing on the low lying areas that are vulnerable to flooding and related infrastructure damage. We are also tracking observations posted by the LEO Network members on a Bering Strait Regional map," Brubaker

There are currently LEO Network members located in tribal governments or regional organizations in Brevig Mission, Elim, Golovin, Koyuk, Nome, Shaktoolik, Shishmaref, Solomon, Stebbins, Teller, Unalakleet, Wales, and White Mountain. Residents who would like to share observations and photos or video about extreme, unusual and unique events in their community can do so through their local LEO Network representative.

Nanook Wrestlers at State - Booshu captures third consecutive title

By Sarah Miller

The Nanook wrestlers returned from the state tournament in Anchorage last weekend with two championship titles and a number of top placers. Of the eight athletes who participated, seven placed; Emery Booshu, junior, took home his third consecutive championship title. If Booshu captures the title again next season, he will be the 10th wrestler in Alaska high school sports to win four state championships. In the 126-weight class, sophomore Leif Erikson also captured the championship title. In their individual weight classes, Alex Gray and Oliver

Hoogendorn placed third, while James Horner and Junyor Erikson took fourth place, and Grady Austin placed fifth. Danner Shreve also represented the Nanooks at the tournament. Nome-Beltz's overall team score put them in fifth place in the state, a continued improvement over the previous two years, when Nome's team took eighth and ninth place. The Bethel and Kotzebue teams took first and second place. Emery Booshu will travel to the Reno Tournament of Champions this upcoming weekend, where he will match up against wrestlers from all over the U.S., taking with him a career record of 99-3. Coach Dudley Homelvig declared the tournament an outstanding conclusion to the sea-

As the wrestling season drew to a close, the Nanooks launched the beginning of basketball with their traditional season openers against Galena. The games took place on both Friday and Saturday. The boys' teams traveled to Galena, where the varsity team defeated the Hawks 56-32 and 62-42. Top scorers for Nome included Klay Baker with 17 points and 12 rebounds on Friday; Tyler Eide with 10 points on Friday and 15 on Saturday; and Cass Mattheis with 16 points in the Saturday game. Baker, Eide, and Mattheis led in rebounds as well. The boys' JV teams tied for wins.

At home, the Lady Nanooks hosted the Ladyhawks, with the varsity girls losing both games, 56-39 and 53-22. The home JV team also lost both games to the Ladyhawks. Varsity coach Don Stiles commented on the weekend that his goal was for the girls to develop into a cohesive unit by the end of the season, capitalizing on its advantage of speed, as the team will be facing several teams with a height advantage. The team is composed of a number of inexperienced players, so Stiles aims to develop their defensive skills, minimizing turnovers and developing offensive patience. Beth Buchanan, Galena's girls varsity coach, praised both teams for their camaraderie on and off the court.

Next weekend, the girls and boys teams will both travel to the Anchorage area. The boys teams will play at the Service Tip-Off against East Anchorage High School on Thursday, while the Lady Nanooks will play against Palmer. An alumni basketball tournament is scheduled for December 27 and 28 at NBHS.

Unalakleet Wolfpack are State Volleyball champions

By Jeffrey Erickson

Hopes are always high for teams or individuals qualifying for a state championship of any kind. The months of preparation and successes build a sense of expectation and optimism. Unfortunately, as with all championships, the final results show a single champion and many others left with disappointment mixed with a sense of satisfaction for giving their all. Western Conference volleyball teams, and their counterparts from across the state came into last weekend with those emotions, prepared to bump, set and spike their way to a state crown.

The Unalakleet Wolfpack had high expectations as they wore the 2012 crown as defending champions. Having lost a big chunk of their powerful attack to graduation they had regrouped to post an undefeated season (22-0) and maintain their standing as the team to beat. The Golovin Lynx had regained their state-quali-

First round Friday matches with Gustavus vs Unalakleet and Akiachak vs Golovin proved to be easy victories for each and they advanced to the semi-final matches. Early indications seemed to point toward a tougher match for the Wolfpack, who would meet the Noatak Lynx, the only team that had taken more than one set from them all year long. Golovin appeared to be superior to their opponent, the Alak Huskies. This did not play to form however. Unalakleet came out hitting on all cylinders and jumped up 2 sets to 0. The always-game Lynx challenged in the 3rd set, but strong serving late by Roberta Walker and superior net play by Gage Ivanoff and Tristen Ticket sparked a comeback and a 3-

Golovin realized it was in a battle with the Huskies from Wainwright when they found themselves down a set. Alak hitters consistently found the floor with spikes and well-placed Saturday.

Social media lit up as fans began touting their favorite in this rematch of the conference championship and match up of the friendly but fierce, regional rivals. There was no mystery about what the other team's strengths and weaknesses.

The undefeated Wolfpack may have felt a little tight with the burden of expectations making many unforced errors in the first set. The Lynx pounced and jumped out to an early lead that seemed insurmountable but again, great serves from Robertal Walker, extraordinary setting by senior standout Jonisha Wilson and a re-emergence of the powerful Wolfpack hitters pulled them back even and they completed the comeback for a 25-22 victory. The disappointment of losing that first set seemed to deflate the battletested Golovin team and the 2nd and 3rd sets were not as close. The Wolfpack completed the 3-0 sweep and grabbed their 2nd consecutive state volleyball championship. The victory capped a second undefeated season as well

Both teams were faced with a new format at the State Mixed-6 Volleyball Championships. shots and the Lynx had their confidence shaken. Senior captain Casey Sherman showed his maturity and poise as he rallied his teammates to grab the second set and even up the match. His powerful left-handed spikes off sets from fellow senior Amanda Moses shook the Huskies. The pivotal third set was a nail biter that saw each team take its shots and Alak grabbing a late lead that looked like they would take it. The Lynx rallied however, and seized the 26-24 victory. The tone was set and they eased through a 4th and final set to win the match and set up the first all-BSSD state championship match on

Savoonga lands two bowhead whales in December

By Diana Haecker

Savoonga whaling captains have landed two whales in the last two weeks. This was welcome news to the community as food stores on St. Lawrence Island were meager due to a dismal spring walrus harvest.

Alaska Eskimo Whaling Commission chairman George Noongwook of Savoonga said that on December 3, whaling captain

While the weather changes every year, this winter so far is too warm, as in early December no ice has yet formed near St. Lawrence Island.

Last year, the Savoonga whaling crews landed whales around Dec. 13, Noongwook said.

Second whale

On Friday, Dec. 6, another whaling crew landed the second whale. It was the crew of first time whaling captain David Akeya, who on his first trip as a registered whaling captain landed his first whale.

Akeya said by phone from his home in Savoonga that on Friday, December 6, two separate groups of whalers went out in search of

They were about 14 miles northeast of Savoonga when they saw "their" bowhead whale.

Akeya said there where other boats south and north of his vessel when the whale popped up right in front of them. "We all saw it at the same time and the guys turned around and had a big smile on their face," Akeya said. He said the taller guys kept standing up so he couldn't see where he was going. "I followed the trail the fluke made," he said. "Man, it was intense," Akeya said of the hunt. His brother Derek Akeya threw the harpoon and struck the whale. It was a 57-ft. female.

"It was our first strike on our first whale," Akeya said.

The surrounding boats came to help bring the animal to shore. A rope was fastened around the whale's tail fluke. About 20 boats, four abreast and several rows long, hooked onto the towline. "The boats were hooked up like a dog team, pulling the whale," described Akeya.

Once ashore, the whale was butchered and put away overnight. "About the whole village came out," said Akeva.

Akeya said portions of the whale were distributed to families throughout his community, island and the region. The whale is feeding a lot of families in Savoonga, Gambell and the region. Boxes with mangtak and whale meat were also sent to Nome's XYZ Center and Quyanna Care Center, and Akeya's family in Nome and Anchorage.

Sharing trails around Nome

A column by

The Nome Kennel Club

Finally some snow fell in the region and winter sport enthusiasts can think about hitting the trails again. Well, what trails? One loop that most Nomeites are familiar with is the trail that loops around Dredge 5, to the Beam Road, towards Gold Hill and back to Icy View. Mushers, skiers, skijorers, and even winter bike riders use the trail. The Nome Kennel Club has in the past years put in the Gold Hill and other trails, staked them with reflective trail markers and maintained them.

The Nome Kennel Club buys trail stakes, reflective tape and pays for the shipping. NKC members and their families spend hours to staple the reflective tape on the markers, bundle them again and load them in the dog sled or snowmachine to be put in every hundred feet or so on the

As anyone familiar with traveling in adverse weather conditions can attest, those trail markers provide an invaluable safety net preventing people from getting lost in blizzards and ground storms. Because trail stakes are so important for safety and enjoyment of trails, the NKC asks members of the public to respect the trails and the markers and not purposefully run them over. An incident last spring was a disappointment to the club as a snowmachiner vandalized a trail and it's markers. The trail was obliterated and had to be put in again. This was a hardship for the club and anyone else who was using that trail.

We encourage people to use the trails that are marked with NKC trail stakes. It is great to see fellow winter enthusiasts out there as we train our sled dog teams. The exposure to skiers, bikers and walkers in turn teaches our sled dogs to pass people and other dogs without hesitation in all kinds of situations. As we share the trails with other users we'd like to remind you that controlling a team of dogs is different than controlling a snow machine or a single animal. While we can stop the team, we don't have control of the side-to-side movement of the team in front of the sled. When encountering a dog team please give it a wide berth. Many teams are very good at passing and will just go on by you like you're not even there. But a team can also be curious and want to check out you or your loose animal. Keep in mind that a dog team may be as long as 50 feet. That means the leaders could veer off the trail 50 feet from the sled even when the sled is stopped. If you are out with loose animals please keep them away from the teams and don't let them chase behind. Close encounters could result in injuries to the animals. Also, while a musher can stand on the brake and keep the sled stopped, often snow conditions, especially early in the season, are not good for setting a hook, getting off the sled and being sure the sled will stay put. So sometimes, it is very difficult for a musher to get off the sled to separate loose animals from the team.

The Nome Kennel Club stakes trails with a thought to the prevailing winds and how a dog team moves on a trail. The prevailing wind in the Nome area is generally from the northeast. Therefore, we put stakes on up wind side of the trail. Generally, if a trail is going East - West (or West - East) the stakes would be on the north side of the trail. If the trail is North-South (or South-North) the stakes would be on the east side of the trail. If it is really windy, sleds get pushed around by the wind and we can't avoid stakes if they are down wind from us. We'd rather get pushed away from the stakes so we don't knock them over. If the trail is on a side hill, we put the stakes on the uphill side, regardless of wind direction. The sled will have a tendency to slide down the hill and we don't want to knock over the stakes. So when you are out on your snowmachines after a new snowfall and want to follow the trail please keep this information in mind. Generally, the stakes should be to on the northern side of a trail that is going eastwest, on the eastern side of a trail that is going north-south and on the uphill side of a trail that is along a side hill. For dog teams it is very helpful to have the trail in the same

The Nome Kennel Club has been around for 106 years and it is proud to perpetuate the tradition of sled dog driving on the Seward Peninsula. As we share trails with different user groups, we wish everybody a safe winter and happy trails. If you have questions or comments, please contact any of our board members -Chrystie Salesky, Kirsten Bey, Janet Balice, Tom Jamgochian or Deb Trowbridge. After you have enjoyed your live Christmas tree for the holidays, please donate it to help "grow" the Nome National Forest. The Nome National Forest (seasonal) is "planted" on the Bering Sea ice in front of town.

The late Connie Madden spearheaded this effort for many years, and it is a great attraction to visitors and townsfolk as well. Please help us keep this tradition alive; your tree would be a welcome addition.

Trees will be collected at the NJUS yard. If you can drop one off, please place it in front of the trailer across from the Post Office Annex.

We are also very willing to pick up from your yard.

By Tyler Rhodes, NSEDC Chief Operations Officer NSEDC lifts scholarships to $2,250 per semester

The Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation (NSEDC) Board of Directors has voted to strengthen one of the region's most robust scholarship programs, increasing the amount available to each recipient to $2,250 per semester. Member community residents may now receive up to $6,750 a year in NSEDC scholarships if they pursue a full-time schedule through spring, summer and fall semesters.

From its start, NSEDC has placed a high value on helping member community residents gain access to education and training. By the end of 2013, NSEDC will have issued more than $6.5 million in scholarships, supporting residents as they have pursued their education to serve the region as teachers, pilots, lawyers, mechanics and in a host of other professions. "Establishing a scholarship program was one of the first things that NSEDC did as an organization," said NSEDC Board Chairman Dan Harrelson. "The Board has always firmly believed in the value of education and supported the growth of our scholarship program. I am proud that we have been able to help so many people reach their goals.'

For several years, NSEDC's scholarship program allowed up to $1,000 per year for recipients. In 2000, that limit changed to $1,000 per semester. Over the years the limit climbed incrementally to the $2,000 level per semester, where it remained from 2007 to 2013. This year, NSEDC awarded 382 scholarships for a total of nearly $722,000.

For more information on NSEDC's scholarship program, please visit www.nsedc.com/eet<http://www.nsedc.com/eet> online, or call NSEDC Education, Employment and Training Director Jerry Ivanoff at (800) 385-3190.

Influenza is coming: How to reduce your risk

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Over 75 people in Alaska have been diagnosed with this year's version of the flu according to the Alaska Section of Epidemiology. Most cases are from the Anchorage region. But soon the flu will be at our doorstep.

So what can you do to reduce the risk of getting the flu this year? Here are a few recommendations:

First, wash your hands. This simple act is the single best way to prevent the spread of infectious disease. Use hand sanitizer after shaking hands or using objects, like phones, used by others. Be kind to others, and wash your hands after sneezing or coughing into your hands.

Second, consider getting a flu shot. It is not too late to get a flu shot, but it may take up to two weeks for it to take effect, so sooner is better.

The vaccine may not be as effective in young children or older persons, especially after age 75. Ironically, the young and the old are the two groups most likely to have severe complications from the flu.

Therefore, the CDC and other infectious disease professionals believe the most important people to vaccinate may not be the people at risk for complications from getting including otherwise healthy individuals at little risk of getting or suffering from influenza, in order to protect those for whom the vaccination would provide little, if any, direct protection.

Doctor Gregory Poland, director of the Mayo Clinic's Vaccine Research Group and member of the US Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices panel refers to this concept as "cocooning," or protecting at-risk groups by surrounding them with vaccinated healthy indi-

Next, take your vitamins, especially vitamin D. There is good evidence that maintaining a healthy diet including fish and perhaps seal oil, both rich in vitamin D, helps reduce the risk of acquiring viral illnesses like the flu.

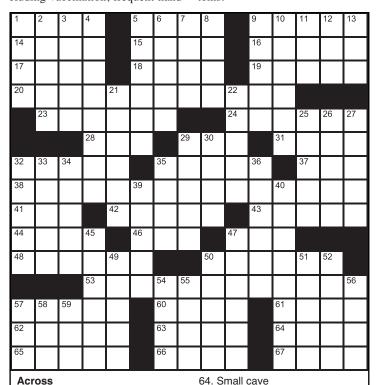

Scientists from Emory University found that vitamin D supplementation may help prevent serious respiratory infections including influenza and other common viral upper respiratory diseases.

Increasingly, scientists from various medical fields suggest that a deficiency of vitamin D due to reduced sun exposure explains why the elderly, the malnourished, and children are more susceptible to influenza.

Finally, if you have severe flu symptoms talk to your doctor about treatment. A medication called Oseltamivir (Tamiflu) can reduce the severity and duration of flu symptoms. If started early in the course of the flu, oseltamivir can help prevent serious complications, like

Saying it Sincerely

By Rev. Karen Sonray, Our Savior Lutheran Church Member of the Nome Ministerial Association

"How silently, how silently the wondrous gift is given. And God imparts to human hearts the wonders of his heaven. No ear can hear his coming, yet in this world of sin, where meek hearts will receive him still the dear Christ enters in."

The words above come from the Christmas carol "O Little Town of Bethlehem" written by Phillip Brooks.

I have always liked this verse. Isn't it true that many of the best gifts in life are often unnoticed? And that the heart of Christmas comes so quietly, so softly that the world in its helter-skelter and busyness often does not notice?

According to the Gospel of Luke, centuries ago messengers in the heavens came to the shepherds who were keeping watch over their flocks that Christmas night. Couldn't the rest of Bethlehem see these heavenly angels? Didn't they look up in the sky? Didn't they hear the army of angels that night, singing, "Glory to God in the highest and peace to God's people on earth?"

Who received this message of the birth of the son of God? Not the Emperor of Rome who had ordered a census and had people of all stations of life traveling to their hometowns to be counted. Not the people in the villages nor the cities or palaces. No, the ones who received God's joyous message that night were those sleeping out under the stars, on the lonely hills: lowly shepherds. Shepherds were considered dirty and lacking any social status. Yet it was they who first heard the incredible good news that night.

How much do you and I miss? We have our own expectations. We have agendas enough to fill up Christmases for years to come. But have we missed the wondrous gift born so silently? No ear can hear its coming. Yet in our broken world, in our own weakness, Christ will enter as we humble ourselves.

God has prepared joys beyond measure to all who are empty enough that they can receive His presence. May we experience the joyous presence of the Christ child born for us this Christmas time.

she convinced the doctors to send her home to heal faster by eating traditional foods that her body was used to and also by being around family. The doctors told her that she would never walk again but she proved them wrong. She came home and went back to her traditional diet and being with family, she healed and started walking again! To the time of her death, her diet was 99 percent traditional Native foods and she rarely ate processed foods.

Estelle served as a Church Elder for both Presbyterian and Seventh Day Adventist Churches until she could not get around anymore due to old age, but never lost her deep faith in God. She always told her children that she got her strength through Jesus Christ daily and being obedient to her Elders and Parents, without substance abuse and eating the right foods, she was blessed with a long life and to the time of her death she had no chronic illnesses.

She will be known for her love of Jesus, strengthening the faith of everyone around her. Her faith in God made her passing so peaceful and serene. She went quickly, but only after coming back and telling her family of the beauties of Heaven, and that she was so awed by the multitudes of the angels that some of us now believe that there is a place called Heaven!

It was -25° and there was a fire

From the 1985 Nugget Christmas edition

By Nancy McGuire

Bill Ulrich a longtime Nomeite died this year, but his story is special.

Bill Ulrich remembers the Christmas of 1929 because it was -25° and there was a fire.

He was 10 years old then and says in those days Santa would come down Main Street on a reindeer sleigh and stopping by the old Lomen Commercial would distribute apples and oranges. (This is just about where the Sitnasuak parking lot is now located.

On Christmas Eve there was a community Christmas program at the old Eagle Hall. It was a big place; they could even get a reindeer on the stage with a sled. "Ol' Con Yenney, the police and fire chief was dressed as Santa. We all knew who it was because his voice was so deep and loud. He gave out stockings that were full of candy and apples and a few oranges. They gave out mostly apples and very few oranges. In those days there were no regular freight flights into Nome. They'd fly small planes in every so often from

Fairbank

"Well, that Christmas morning the fire whistle started blowing around 10 a.m. The ACS wireless station was burning. (That was located near what is now the Alaska Cab Garage. It was about 500 ft. East of Steadman and Fifth Ave.)

"In 1929 there were very few houses in the area and the fire department had to bring the hose all the way down from Third and Steadman. The hose froze in the -25° F temperature and there was no water to fight the fire.

As they said then, 'They saved the lot.'

"It was really hard for the firefighters. The Dowd family lived in the building that was destroyed. No one was hurt.

"The night before, on Christmas Eve, I'd delivered to Jack Dowd's boy, Walter, a big toy fire truck as a Christmas present." It was hard for the 10-year-old Ulrich to think of all these Christmas presents burning up.

He says in Nome everyone was very close, lots of presents were given. People had to send for their gifts early so they could make the last barge. "Of course the store had a lot of presents too," he says.

"There was a different feeling then, when we were blocked in with ice everyone was forced into a social get together. The community drew together. There were lots of presents given. Not just to relatives, but to friends. Everyone drew together. After all, we didn't get mail except for once a month when the dog team came in from Nenana.

"The whole town went to Midnight Mass at the Catholic church. It was such a big ol' church (It's now Old St. Joe's Hall on Anvil City Square.) that they had to start heating it about a week ahead," he says.

Christmas in Barrow had mountains of gifts

By Nancy McGuire

Charles Brower is the new pastor of the Methodist Church in Nome. Rev. Brower is from Barrow and gives a wide grin when he tells of the Christmas festivities in his hometown in the 1950s. He says that back in the 40s and 50's there was more of a sense of community. Barrow was much smaller then, only about 1,200 people.

Most of the festivities took place in the Utkeavik Presbyterian Church. There was a big Thanksgiving feast and another on Christmas, but on Christmas people flocked to the church before noon carrying presents. There were so many stacked in a huge mountain in the corner of the room.

They had cooler tops in the pews and these became little tables for the feast. There was whale meat, caribou stew, goose soup and all the trimmings. When everyone was finished eating, some men went up to that big pile of presents and started hollering out names. Sometimes the tags would come off the gift so the men would look around for someone who didn't have a very big pile of gifts and that person would have to open it in front of everyone. It provided a few laughs if a man got a lady's flannel nightgown. He chuckles as he recalls the time an elder woman got a toy wooden PanAm flying boat. Then there was the Flexi Flier sled that had no tag on it and went to someone else.

He says they don't have community gift exchanges any more but they still have Community Games between Christmas and New Years. There would be games for little kids and story telling. The singles would compete against the marrieds and the winners would determine what games to do next.

He says one year someone took a bunch of folks for a snowmachine ride in a freight sled out on the sea ice and attached a parasail. Some poor fellow was walking across the lagoon at the time, saw this big white cloud approaching and thought he was being attacked by aliens.

On New Year's Eve folks would gather at the church and watch movies—science films provided by the Moody Bible Institute. Then they

John Patrick Norbert, Jr. March 28, 1934-November 27, 2013

John was born March 28, 1933 to John and Marion Norbert in Teller. John went to school at Holy Cross and Mt. Edgecumbe. He joined the Army when he was 17 years old; he told the recruiters he was born a year early so he could enlist.

John met Grace while they were at subsistence camp. After John was discharged from the Army, he married the love of his life, Grace.

John worked as a heavy equipment operator and mechanic in Nome until he joined the Federal Aviation Administration; while working with FAA John was transferred from town to town throughout Alaska. After working for FAA, he worked for BP in Prudhoe Bay.

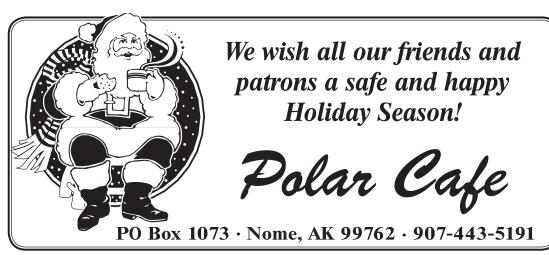

John finally settled his family in Dillingham, in 1973. He drilled over 200 water wells in Dillingham. He enjoyed commercial fishing with Harvey Samuelson. The most fun was during herring fishing and subsistence hunting for whales, seals, caribou, moose and birds. He taught his sons and William to hunt, trap beavers, fish and tan skins. He enjoyed making "head cheese" and loved sharing it. When we ate our subsistence, he would say, "This is big time ummmnummmm." He made subsistence nets, uluaqs, wooden spoons and bowls, and harpoons.

He loved his kids and the grandkids were so precious. John loved his country and the people of Bristol

Bay.
John is survived by siblings Teresa

On October 5, 1913, the delayed equinoctial storm burst in all its fury upon the town of Nome, on the Bering Sea. For two days a heavy on-shore gale had been blowing from the southeast and the surf was running high. "Old timers" spoke of the big storms of 1900 and 1902 and seafaring men looked at the steadily falling barometer, wisely shook their heads and murmured of greater things to

As the night grew later, the wind increased until it attained a velocity of over sixty miles an hour. The sea rose ten feet in four hours and still continued to rise and it seemed as if the city were doomed. Immense lighters were torn from their moorings and hauled shoreward on the crest of mighty waves to become great battering rams destroying docks, break-waters, buildings and every obstruction

The merchants were unprepared believing until the last minute that their buildings were safe. Without warning a mammoth wave swept the backs of the buildings on the south side of Front Street, breaking them in and every available man and team were in demand to move stocks of merchandise and household effects from the threatened buildings. Many waited until too late and were unable to reach their goods stored in basements and warehouse buildings facing the sea. The water rushed in under the buildings lifted the floors high into the air, and then retreating let them fall into place again, until they were eventually broken into pieces. A Chinese laundryman, hoping to keep his floor in place, weighted it down with large rocks. To his surprise, the next wave hurled the floor, rocks and all high into the air.

Buildings were falling and flues tumbling in every direction and fear of a new enemy arose—that of the companion of floods—fire. A fire patrol was organized.

All fires on the doomed south side of Front Street were ordered to put out. The only exception to this being that in the North Pole Bakery, where the bakers stood all night in the water, baking bread for tomorrow's hungry.

"Snake River Bridge is going out," came the warning cry to the people of the 'Sand Spit." To some the warning came too late or was not heard and many were compelled to camp for hours without food or shelter on the highland to the westward, as every means of reaching Nome was cut off.

One man living on the "Spit" was awakened by the waves breaking into his cabin. Hurriedly arousing his wife, he had her tie their baby on his back and facing the heavy current, swam across Snake River. Just before reaching the opposite shore, he became exhausted and was about to sink when he was rescued. A boat was immediately sent back for his

In spite of every effort made to save it, the bridge finally gave away before the jam of vessels, lighters, boats, and wreckage pressing against it and went out in the flood, carrying with it some of the main electric light cables. For a time it seemed as if total darkness would be added to the horrors of the night. Again and again the electric current would be cut off by the falling of poles and the crossing of wires and darkness would intervene for a few seconds. Hurried repairs would be made and the city again flooded with light. Through all the hours of the terrible night, the superintendent of the Electric Lighting Company and his assistants rode rapidly through the dangerous streets, watching and working to prevent fire and darkness.

The pumps of the city had already been covered with sand and the pumping station wrecked. The most incipient blaze in the high wind prevailing meant destruction to the city. The situation was appalling and when for a second, there was darkness and above the roar of the surf and the wall of the wind could be heard the grinding and crashing of buildings, the stoutest hearts were awed to supplication.

As the sea steadily rose, the "Sand Spit" disappeared and the river and the sea became one. Nearly every building was swept from the "Spit" even the big plant of the Pacific Cold Storage Company being practically destroyed. This company was one of the heaviest losers in the flood.

The Eskimo village was almost obliterated. River Street was swept clean, the waves rising so rapidly and cutting off retreat from the street so early, that many barely escaped with their lives and were unable to save anything. One man was seen to take two children on to the roof from which they were rescued at great risk, just a moment before the house toppled into the raging torrent.

When the storm was at its height, the cry arose that the bulkheads protecting the Elite Bath House and Hotel (a three story building) were gone and the building filled with people was in danger. The inmates were warned to leave at once and the last guest had barely escaped when the building was seen to waiver and then collapse, carrying everything with it into the sea. The next morning there was nothing to mark the spot where it had stood; the heavy boilers and all had been swept away. Even the largest timbers had been smashed to kindling wood. Nothing was saved and nothing better serves to show the indomitable spirit of the people of this Northland than the answer of Mr. James when notified of their loss, by his wife over the long distance telephone. "Our building has tumbled into the sea and everything is lost." The answer came back "Don't worry. As long as it had to go, I'm glad it's all gone. It will save bothering with a lot of stuff." This was $50,000 ($1.2M in 2013 dollars). Nearly every building along the south side of Front Street was badly damaged or destroyed. A section of the Fitzgerald Building, eighty feet in length was swept The Life Saving Station was smashed to pieces, these were piled in a heap, then covered with sand by the waves and with other wreckage formed a barrier which protected the north side of the street from the force of the waves.

from a man who had just lost over

Towards morning the wind veered to the southwest and while it proved disastrous to the buildings along the south side of First Avenue West, by undermining them and toppling them into River Street, which had become a part of the sea, it cut down the waves and gradually the sea began to subside.

The morning after presented a sad sight. Houses were floating in the sea and river. The buildings on the south side of the street, which had not been totally destroyed, had had their end walls torn out and the waves were sweeping through to the street and carrying everything before them. On Front Street, where the wreckage was being cleared away, horses were standing in water to their breasts. Menhomeless and hungry-were working in water waist deep trying to help others save something. Overall however, there hung the spirit of thankfulness that, bad as it was, it had been no worse.

The "East End" suffered greatly not only by having the buildings on the south side of the street almost totally demolished, but from crude oil.

The Steamer Elk, which for many years had lain on the beach, below the Standard Oil Plant, turned under the force of the waves, pointed her prow toward the hills and was carried as far as the north side of Front Street, where she now rests serenely as if to say, "Fear not little children; Noah has nothing over us. Am I not here and vonder Anvil Mountain?'

Owing to the heroic efforts which were made, but one life, that of C.V. Morrison, an old timer, was lost in the city of Nome. A different fate befell the poor unfortunate seamen who were at sea on small vessels. Sad tales came from up and down the coast. Many ships had been wrecked and these and the bodies of the unfortunate ones on board were washed around all night on hastily constructed rafts; others carried away on an unmanageable launch, were saved by a line catching on the top of a telephone pole, the water at this point having reached such a depth.

Many strange incidents, among them

A freighter at Safety Road House was forced to escape on a raft. Before leaving however, he took his horses into a log cabin where he tied them with their heads as high as he could pull them. Returning two days later, after the flood had subsided, he found them alive, although the water had been over their backs.

A mule managed to reach a high spot of land where he lived through the storm. Many malamutes would swim to the spot and try to get on too, but the mule recognizing them, as foes in time of peace of refuge, in time of storm and so would kick off every dog that tried to climb on.

One of the lighters, as if trying to make amends after battering down several buildings, proceeded to slip under another which was about to fall, imbedded itself in the sand and there it now rests a unique and secure foundation.

The Eskimos seemed as much frightened as the townspeople. A miner coming in from the creeks met a native woman fleeing with her two children to the hills. When asked what was the matter, she said "Oh! Heap big water everybody drown-me afraid, me run."

Down the coast, the action of the waves uncovered an Eskimo village, which had probably been buried for hundreds of years. But the wind changed and

The aunt took care of the house and kept order. Charles smiles as he tells that when she was in a TB hospital in Texas she worked in the laundry. the heavy surf and shifting sands reburied it again.

The mad waves and resistless undertow played many queer pranks. A heavy safe was washed from one building and carried eastward in the face of the storm and buried in the basement of another building. A piano from Nome was found at the Cape thirteen miles to the eastward, while part of the Solomon Railroad track was washed nearly thirty miles westward to Nome River. Meat from the Pacific Cold Storage Plant at Nome was picked up as far to the eastward as Solomon, thirty two miles away, while some also

One of the most gruesome results of the storm was the washing out of the old cemeteries at Nome and Solomon. Over fifty bodies were recovered and reburied. Dear Nancy

This past week, the day after the Nome City Council meeting I heard on the radio a snippet of Councilman Matt Culley's comments and question that he made regarding the Nome Volunteer Fire Department and their funds. I intentionally use the word snippet. I have learned over the years living in Nome that all you get is a snippet when listening to the radio, and cannot and should not make any judgment from them.

I would like to note here that neither Councilman Culley, nor anyone on the City Council, questions where and when the NVFD spends the funds raised during the winter carnival that we all just enjoyed. I also would like to note that all expenditures are voted and approved on by the members of the NFVD, and a clear an auditable paper trail is kept for each and every one. Councilman Culley never questioned the integrity of the NVFD, rather he voiced procedural question raised about separation of the funds of the Department (related to the City of Nome) and the Club (not related to the City of Nome) entities of the NVFD. The day after the Council meeting

I was able to meet with Councilman Culley for some time and discussed this (and a few other issues). Upon hearing him out on the totality of his question and comments on this issue. and his feelings regarding the NVFD, I was, and am, confident that his questions will be answered in an upcoming meeting with the City's auditors. I am especially pleased to hear that Councilman Culley is not interested in taking the donated funds from the Carnival from the NVFD and putting them under the control of the City.

As the President of the NVFD I am pleased we are able to show that we have always been fiscally responsible with the monies raised during the winter Carnival, other fundraisers, grants, and the City of Nome tax payer (department budget) funds.

under similar situations in the future. Another $200-$300 million is due to accelerating the credits realized under ACES. These credits, according to the department, go away under the new tax structure (MAPA) and are a onetime cost. Increased Trans Alaska Pipeline System (TAPS) tariff accounts for about $200 million between the two estimates. The tariff went up about $2/barrel between April and December. If oil production decline continues, this cost will continue to increase as the cost of operating TAPS is spread out among fewer and fewer barrels of oil. The remaining factor is deductible expenditures. Under our profit-based tax system such expenditures can be deducted from gross revenue. This makes forecasting a bit of a guessing game as to how much companies will spend in this manner. The Fall Forecast has about $450 million in deductible expenditures more than the Spring Forecast.

That's this year. So what happens in FY15? Revenue forecasts for that year are down $2 billion, from $6.5 billion forecasted in April to $4.5 billion forecasted this December. We can't predict a deficit number yet since we won't know what is being spent until we pass a budget in April. But we can predict that there will be a deficit. We can also expect State spending to be curtailed. The Governor's budget director Karen Rehfeld said: "I think that you will see reductions in all components of the budget." Kevin Meyer, cochair of Senate Finance, said: "Alaskans should expect some lean budgets." It is not expected that we will simply cut down spending to meet expected revenues. Many legislators think that would be far too jarring to the State's

We have substantial savings with about $12 billion in our Constitutional Budget Reserve and about $5.5 billion in our Statutory Budget Reserve. We will be using some of this to soften the blow of reduced revenue. Bear in mind, however, that these funds are not recurring. That combined total of $17.5 billion in savings won't last long in the territory we're in. The Governor is proposing spending $3 billion to shore up the unfunded liability to the State's retirement systems. The recurring payment on this liability is $629 million this year and on track to reach $1 billion per year. The $3 billion dollar infusion should reduce that rate to about half of that or $500 million per year. While this is a prudent use of State funds that should save us over $2 billion over the life of the liability, it still takes our savings from $17.5 billion to $14.5 billion. Add in our $2 billion deficit for this fiscal year, and we're down to $12.5 billion in these savings accounts. If we run a similar deficit in FY 15, that would take us to $10.5 billion. As you can see, we won't be able to keep this up for long. Without a major turnaround in production and some help on prices, it will not be long until the specter of a sales tax, income tax, or permanent fund spending appears.

I think House Bill 77 will receive a lot of attention this coming session. It is a comprehensive bill consisting of 51 sections. It is, according to the Governor's office, a bill to streamline permitting. While the details and effects of this bill are long enough to consume many newsletters, I will focus on the main sticking point. Under the proposed legislation "water reservations" could only be applied for by state agencies and subdivisions of the state. Under current law, any person or tribe can apply. I think it is import to discuss what a water reservation is. It is not a water right and doesn't deal with the right to use water. Rather it has to do with not using water. It would be used in scenarios where you wanted to make sure that an entity did not use water in excess of what is needed for some specified purpose. For example, if a town has an underground aquifer as its water supply, they would want to make sure that a certain amount of the sources feeding that aquifer were not consumed by other users, like a mine. It could also be used in salmon streams, making sure that enough water was left in the stream for the salmon to make it upriver to spawn and for their offspring to make it back to the ocean.

There is a large contingency opposing the bill that feels it is individuals who should be able to file for these. Supporters point out that we are the only state in the union that allows individuals to file for these. There is also an Alaska Native rights component to this. Under the proposed law, federally recognized tribes and other native organizations would not be able to file for a water reservation as they are not "subdivisions of the

In addition to the philosophical issues with this, there is also a practical one. Many communities in Alaska are not incorporated 1st or 2nd class cities and have no municipal structure. These communities are often run by tribal organizations or nonprofit corporations. Neither of these organizations would have the right to file for a water reservation on behalf of the citizens they serve. There was a very close vote on the floor of the House to allow federally recognized tribes to file, but that measure failed. Without that concession, many, including myself, were unable to support the bill. The bill is now in the hands of the Senate. It has gone through all the committees, but supporters do not have the votes needed to pass it. There will likely be continued efforts to gain support, and if the bill changes I hope that it includes federally recognized tribes.

Redistricting is finally over. The Alaska Superior Court ruled that the new plan is constitutional, and no party has appealed to the Supreme Court. Here is the new HD 39. (see map) It is still theoretically possible that one of the parties who filed amicus briefs in this lawsuit could appeal, but at this point that seems unlikely and their standing for such an appeal would be unsure.

On the home front things have been pretty tough. Storms decimated a lot of the southern coast of the Norton Sound and Lower Yukon coast. The Governor has declared disasters. Disaster Assistance Centers were scheduled to open from 9 a.m.-7 p.m. in Kotlik December 8 and 9 and in Stebbins December 10 and 11. On-line and telephone registration will begin December 7. A disaster assistance team was scheduled to visit the community of Kotlik last weekend. In many of the effected communities, water and sewer infrastructure were severely damaged. In addition, some homes were damaged and some winter food stores were lost. A lot of work has been done, but a lot more work is yet to be done. Our hopes and prayers are Savoonga and Gambell experienced an economic disaster this spring when the walrus hunt failed due to unique climatic conditions. A combination of ocean currents and winds kept the ice unstable, and normal hunting was not possible. The resources from these hunts provide not only food for the winter, but also ivory for commerce. Without ivory to carve and sell, paying heat and power bills becomes more difficult. While an 'economic disaster" has been declared that does not allow the State much in terms of authority to spend money. That still has to happen though the normal process which is slow and cyclical. The situation has not gotten much better, and we are looking at very real food shortages and other problems. We are working with the State, communities, and Kawerak to see how we can improve this situation.

There is good news. Savoonga landed two whales this week, which they will share with Gambell. $6,500 has been received by both communities by the food bank at Presbyterian Church and $150 vouchers have been provided by the Nome Lions Club. We are working with ANTHC on a food distribution program. Heating assistance applications for Savoonga and Gambell are being expedited. NSEDC has provided substantial assistance and may provide more. Bering Strait Regional Housing Authority is suspending payment requirements for home buyers. The Alaska Community Action on Toxics has raised nearly $10,000 in relief funds and is working with multiple private business on both food and non-food distribution. An anonymous organization has donated $5,000 in ammunition for hunters. Canned salmon is on the way. Kawerak is doing a food drive for the month of December. Multiple airlines are helping with food transport. The State is expected to provide about 6,000 lbs of bison meat. We are encouraged by recent developments and thankful for the kindness and generosity that has poured out for Saint Lawrence Island.

I hope everyone has a Merry Christmas and enjoys time with family and friends.

If you need assistance or would like to provide input I can be reached at 800-478-3789 or Rep.Neal.Foster@akleg.gov. Thank

Council bans Benchoff and boat from port use

By Sandra L. Medearis

Frozen fast into Nome's harbor ice, the tugboat-gold dredge Rustler has been on the move all the same.

The Nome Port Commission pushed the issue onto the Nome Common Council when it passed a resolution saying the City of Nome should remove the Rustler from the harbor, sue her owner, gold miner Mike Benchoff, for costs and bar him from using the Port of Nome.

Before that could happen, the Nome Common Council would have to approve the port commission's resolution.

Monday night, the Council approved the port panel's action and effectively dumped the Rustler, aka Conaca, and its two years of enforcement issues onto the State Superior Court.

The Council voted 4-2 on Dec. 17 to ratify the Port Commission's Dec. 6 measure, with councilmen Louis Green and Randy Pomeranz voting no and Josie Stiles. Stan Andersen. Tom Sparks and Jerald Brown casting yes votes.

The action, worded by Patrick Munson, city attorney, approves three actions against Benchoff for breaking tariff rules, failing to pay fines levied by Port of Nome and failure to pull his boat from the water before winter ice covered the harbor.

The resolution also:

· Directs the port director, and Josie Bahnke, city manager, to impound the Rustler at the earliest possible time for many violations of the Port of Nome tariff and for its status as a delinquent vessel according to City law:

 Authorizes the city attorney to file a lawsuit against Benchoff to recover the cost of cleaning, removing, storing and disposing of Benchoff's personal property, the vessel Rustler, its contents and all hazardous substances or other potential pollutants aboard the vessel;

· Permanently bans Benchoff from using Port of Nome property for any reason and instructs the Nome Police Dept. and City attorney to enforce the ban through all reasonable and legal means, including citing, arresting, and filing suit against Benchoff for criminal trespass if he attempts to use port property without permission.

Councilman Louis Green Sr. raised the issue with Munson, attorney, on whether the City had jurisdiction to ban anyone from the navigable waters of the Snake River.

No, but the City could ban Benchoff from using the port land it

Notice to all claim holders.

Did you know that your mining claim could be staked over by another person? In accordance with DNR regulations, "Junior Claims" may be staked over "Senior Claims."

Knowingly, staking over legitimate mining claims is done in hopes that the "Senior Claim" has an error in the original filing or annual paperwork, which then, by default, the "Senior Claim" would be forfeited to the "Junior Claim."

"Junior Claim" holders can legally mine the "Senior Claim." This is basically legal claim jumping!

The DNR tries to notify all "Senior Claim" holders when someone files a "Junior Claim" over the top of them, but this is not always possible (it is not the DNR's responsibility to enforce or police claim filings, they just record them). If you have a beach/ocean claim you have a "Junior Claim" on top of you. If you didn't get a letter, the only way to find out if your claim has been overfiled is to call the DNR, as "Junior Claims" do not show up on Mapper. There is one way to find them on Mapper, but you have to do a "Name Search" and to do that you need the name of the person.

Let There be Peace

As we look around our wonderful town of Nome we see the work of a community that is at peace with itself. We care about the well being of our families, friends and neighbors. We pitch in and volunteer for the betterment of our town and almost everyone plays a role in making Nome a better place.

As Nome and the rest of the communities in western Alaska enjoy peace and serenity, we are confronted by horrible and unspeakable violence that has happened with mass murders in other communities in our nation. The recent slaying of 20 first-graders at Sandy Hook Elementary School in Connecticut, mall shootings in Portland, in a theater in Colorado, in a place of worship in Chicago, the shooting of Congress woman Gabby Gifford and constituents in Arizona, Columbine High School in Colorado, a high school in Paducah, Kentucky, Virginia Tech bring violence to our nation's soul. Why? This type of violence seems to be escalating. Are assault rifles and their availability the problem? Are the pressures of our society the problem? Is it a combination of many factors? Is there a solution to this horrible problem?

We all anguish over the grief each family of the victims must endure. We as a nation and as individual communities mourn the loss of innocent lives. However, we must put an end to this type of violence. We can't just do lip service. We must tighten gun control. Automatic assault rifles are not something we all need. They are not the weapon for deer hunting or moose hunting. No civilian needs them for personal protection. We have too many powerful gun lobbies with too much money to spend. The National Rifle Association should stick with teaching gun safety and hunter education. They have been too pushy in their mindless support for the macho right to carry a gun, the bigger the better. Hey, NRA, reel it in and gain some common sense so our children can grow up and we can live without gun-toting loonies in our midst. Let's do something to promote peace on earth and let it begin with us. -N.L.M.-

The process is simple to have the Junior Claim removed but it must be done in the courts and in advance, before the season starts. If you want to protect your claim, you must take preemptive legal action. Remember, the "Junior Claim" holder has the right to you're your claim until you take legal action to remove them, which could take months if you wait until after the fact.

People have gambled with thousands of dollars in hopes their bet pays off... at the expense of legitimate claim holders and miners. This money is non-refundable, so to send a message and hopefully put a stop to this unethical behavior, I urge all claim holders to take the appropriate action and denounce this behavior in Nome.

The "Shirley Tree" has been installed on the front lawn of the Nome Youth Facility on 4th Avenue. Please feel free to add your handmade ornament or note on it to remember the loss of a loved one or to send positive wishes to one in danger or one who is ill or is alone.

The "Shirley Tree" is a tradition named after Shirley Noet who fought a valiant battle with cancer and who was a shining light in the lives of so many in Nome.

The "Shirley Tree" is a community tree, one for all of us. It provides an opportunity to celebrate the lives of those we've lost, those we hope will find their way, those deployed and their families, those suffering, those to whom we wish joy and com-

The "Shirley Tree" is on public property so you don't have to worry about trespassing. Walk right up to it and add a biodegradable ornament, attach a note. And know that the 'Shirley Tree", at holiday's end, will become a part of the Nome National Forest and will be swept out to sea at the end of Iditarod (minus lights and non-organic/non-biodegradable items) to become part of the waters that sustain life.

Dear Editor:

It has come to my understanding that I was overzealously verbose in my last letter, for which I do apologize; I will make a concerted effort to rein in such tendencies today.

In recent days certain events in two states have moved me in such a way that I feel compelled to com-

Please enclose payment with form.

I present an economic argument for the futility of a federal law that is being resisted on multiple local and state locales, and the change is far over due.

I am about to take a public stand that is truly controversial, and mind you that I in no way neither embrace nor personally endorse the use of intoxicants of any kind. I am opined that to allow a substance to control the mind is a sin against God and a shame to the dignity of a person. That written I proceed over this precipice.

If a corporation had in course of several years suffered multiple annual $20 billion losses and from the onset had a reputation of bumbling inefficiency, investors would be enraged, corporate officers heads would roll, and boards of directors replaced. Of course this is fictional. as no corporation could long survive at this level. However, a government agency certainly could.

I refer to the DEA in it's over forty year War on Drugs. This agency costs taxpayers between $20 and 25 billion annually and has yet to stem the tide of imported illegal drugs.

In 1920 the National Prohibition Act laid the foundation for the 18th amendment. Dubbed the Great Social Experiment, it took only a dozen years for the public and government to understand that 'morality cannot be legislated'.

The federal prohibition of marijuana in the same period was in large part economic based. In the midst of the Great Depression, many states didn't want illegal immigrants coming in and competing for the few jobs available. Sound familiar? The result was several southern border states outlawed marijuana as a means to deport illegals. The federal government soon followed, led by Hearst, DuPont and Mellon, but theirs was a personal financial incentive according to some historians. Further discussions of these three are beyond the purposes of this letter, but trust me on this point. There was a lot money involved.

The marijuana 'problem' basically was not a federal priority for the next forty years. In 1971 then President Nixon declared a War on Drugs, and established the little known drug treatment programs and the federal demand reduction programs, but what we do remember was the great amounts of money poured into the DEA. In 1969, there were about 100,000 arrests for marijuana use, last year 1.6 million. It sounds like a major problem, and a scary one, everyone is smoking dope. Actually, the use is about the same as it was 40 years ago, about 1.3 percent of the

There are just more arrests.

What is scary is that about half of those arrests were for amounts less than one ounce and a portion of which were the result of the DEA campaign to seek and arrest those who are using it for medical purposes in states that approve of such

The federal prohibition of drugs is a shame and an economic sham. Dealers consider the 10% confiscated by government agencies to be a cost of business and simply increase production to accommodate this loss.

There are now seven states that have decriminalized small amounts of marijuana, thirteen that allow medical use. Now Washington and Colorado have legalized recreational use this year. They both have age requirements (21), driving penalties, possession limits and cultivation restrictions as do all states for alcohol (a legal and well taxed drug).

If the federal government were to accept this growing trend and repeal its restriction of marijuana, it would save 20 billion dollars a year in direct enforcement costs. The costs of trying a person for possession can cost as much as $20,000. This would be a savings of $8 billion. The average cost of incarceration is about $100 to $120 per day or about a billion a year. All for minor offenses!

As I have already written at length, and I promised an economic based rationale, I will only mention in passing the CDC reports on drug gang violence to the tune of hundreds of deaths per year. Or the 50,000 gang related deaths in Mexico. Further, are the costs savings and the value of prevention by education paid by a taxed product? Is it necessary to address the value of treatment programs instead of incarceration? There will always be those who use drugs, alcohol and tobacco, but why legalize and subsidize growers for a drug that directly contributes to fully one third of all health care costs and criminalize another? Making a product illegal indirectly subsidizes the criminal industry by inflating the costs. Ask anyone on St. Lawrence Island what illegal booze costs. Legalization will provide a taxable commodity with controlled price and legal profit —an economic win on all levels.

If the federal government legalized and controlled marijuana the tremendous loss of lives, of loss of individual liberty which cannot be quantified in dollars would be saved. The loss of billions in federal money would be stemmed and a profit of $65 billion in taxes as esti-

ICC conducts food security study

The Inuit Circumpolar Council is in the process of conducting a food security study for the Arctic. The study is called "An Inuit Perspective on food security in the Alaska Arctic: Building a Conceptual Framework on How to Assess Change in the Arctic." Caroline Behe with the ICC Alaska visited the communities of Wales, Gambell, Stebbins, Point Kaktovik, Lay, Selawik and Kivalina to gather data and traditional knowledge. The project aims to build baselines to assess food security in the Arctic and to understand the pressures on traditional food sources that result from climate changes, increased human presence and industrial development in the Arctic.

Those baselines include the need to have a full understanding of ice coverage in order to understand the food web dynamics.

2012 Arctic Report card shows record sea ice loss

This year's Arctic Report Card details dramatic changes in the Arctic with record losses of sea ice and late spring snow. The Arctic region continued to break records in 2012among them the loss of summer sea ice, spring snow cover and melting of the Greenland ice sheet.

Snow cover: A new record low snow extent for the Northern Hemisphere was set in June 2012 and a new record low was reached in May over Eurasia.

Sea ice: Minimum Arctic sea ice extent in September 2012 set a new all-time record low, as measured by satellite since 1979. Greenland ice sheet: A rare, nearly ice sheet-wide melt event on the Greenland ice sheet in July, covered about 97 percent of the ice sheet on a single day.

Vegetation: The tundra is getting greener and there's more aboveground growth. During the period of 2003-2010, the length of the growing season increased through much vulnerable to the encroaching red fox. Additionally, massive phytoplankton blooms below the summer sea ice suggest estimates of biological production at the bottom of the marine food chain may be 10 times

Ocean: Sea surface temperatures in summer continue to be warmer than the long-term average at the growing ice-free margins, while upper ocean temperature and salinity show significant variability with no clear trends.

Weather: Most of the notable weather activity in fall and winter occurred in the sub-Arctic. There were three extreme weather events, including an unusual cold spell in late January to early February 2012 across Eurasia, and two record storms characterized by very low central pressures and strong winds near western Alaska in November 2011 and north of Alaska in August

Arctic Report Cards are produced by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration on the current state of the Arctic environment. The peer-reviewed report contains contributions from 141 authors from 15 countries. ConocoPhillips settles with EPA for oil discharge

ConocoPhillips Alaska, Inc., has signed a consent agreement with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency stemming from a December, 2007 spill near their Kuparuk Unit petroleum facility on Alaska's North Slope. As part of the agreement, the company paid a $45,000 penalty. "Any oil discharge on Alaska's North Slope can cause harm," said Jeff KenKnight, manager of EPA's Water Office permit compliance unit. "Spills can often be reduced or eliminated by upgrading existing maintenance and inspection programs and being more aggressive with spill prevention planning."

According to EPA enforcement documents, a failure in a 24-inch flow line discharged approximately 102 barrels of mixed water and crude oil onto the nearby frozen arctic tundra. Company and contract responders constructed a 300-yardlong ice road to improve site access and built snow berms to create secondary containment to help contain the spill. Using shovels and hot water, the recovery teams recovered and removed crude oil and affected snow, and then hot-water flushed the oil from the tundra. Crude oil was later separated and recovered from the snow.

Former Eskimo Whaling Commission execs sentenced to jail

U.S. District Court Judge Sharon Gleason last week sentenced Teresa Judkins, 52, of Barrow to six months in prison, followed by three years of supervised release and ordered her to pay $100,339 in restitution. Judkins was the executive director from the Alaska Eskimo Whaling Commission in 2007 and 2008 and stood accused of two counts of intentional misapplication of funds from the AEWC, which receives federal grant money. Judkins misapplied the more than $100,000 by purchasing airline tickets, hotels and car rentals for her and her family unrelated to AEWC business, for buying a new snowmachine with AEWC funds, for taking payroll advances; for issuing and cashing AEWC checks for her own use and for taking payroll advances out of AEWC's coffers and never paying them back.

On Nov. 29, Judge Gleason sentenced Judkins' predecessor Maggie Ahmaogak, 62, to 41 months in prison and ordered her to pay $393,000 in restitution. Ahmaogak was accused of two counts of intentional misapplication of funds and one count of money laundering for misapplying almost $400,000 in funds from the AEWC.

Ahmaogak was the executive director for AEWC from 1990 until her termination in April 2007. According to assistant U.S. Attorney Aunnie Steward, Ahmaogak intentionally misapplied $393,000 of AEWC

FIRE AND ICE — NVFD firefighters battled a fire that involved two connected houses on Lomen Ave in the morning hours of Dec. 12. The water used to quench the flames quickly froze and turned the road and sidewalk slick as an ice rink. Fire hoses also were frozen stiff and firefighters had a hard time rolling them up after the blaze was extinguished.

"All I can say is 'Be careful.' If your pipes are frozen, don't go away and leave your space heater."

Johnson cautioned that in his 21 years on the department, thawing pipes had caused many fires.

"We do what we can do. We do our jobs—alarm goes off, we show up," Johnson said.

"But be careful whether it's thawing pipes, or Christmas lights, or wood stoves, or whatever. It doesn't take a lot to start a fire," he said.

The buildings were very old, Johnson noted, with multiple roof jobs impeding the firefighting operation.

"They were stacked on there thick."

Russia collects evidence to claim more territorial waters in the Arctic

According to the online publication India & Russia Report, a unique Arctic expedition has brought a topsecret Russian submarine into the limelight. The submarine was enlisted to help Russia gain evidence of its right to territorial waters in the Arctic. Moscow is prepared to present evidence to the U.N. Convention on the Law of the Sea that would expand Russia's territorial waters in the Arctic, thus asserting its right to the bed of the Arctic that is extremely rich in hydrocarbons. Russia filed a similar application once before, but the bid was turned down due to a lack of geological samples. The new evidence has been obtained by AS-12 Losharik - Russia's topsecret deep-sea nuclear-powered bathyscaphe. The North Pole expedition was undertaken in late September as part of the Arctic 2012 research project.

Coast Guard Reauthorization bill sent to President

The Senate cleared a Coast Guard reauthorization bill last week after agreeing with changes made by the House addressing standards for wastewater discharges from ships and the future of two icebreaker vessels. The final version of the legislation, which the Senate cleared by voice vote, authorizes about $17.4 billion more for the Coast Guard over fiscal 2013 and 2014 and authorizes a force of 47,000 activeduty personnel.

The Senate action sends the measure to President Barack Obama for his signature, ending a lengthy round of legislative ping-pong between the two chambers. The bill requires a report from the Coast Guard on the need for an expanded presence in the Arctic region, including forward operating bases, shore infrastructure, personnel, logistics, communications, and affiliated resources requirements to support operations.

It also prevents the Coast Guard from scrapping the heavy icebreaker Polar Sea until it gauges private sector interest in operating an icebreaker and it directs the Coast Guard to also assess any interest the private sector would have in buying or leasing the USCGC Polar Sea.

The bill also requires the Coast Guard to work with federal, state and local entities to decide what needs to be done to make the harbor in St. George a year-round fully functional harbor.

Community service organizations split NSEDC's $100,000

By Sandra L. Medearis

Once again, community leaders came to Nome Common Council to pitch projects for funding from Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. money given to communities at the end of the year.

Rules set by NSEDC demand community input in spending shares from the Community Development Quota fishing group.

Eight groups went home happier after the meeting Dec. 17 having split the $100,000 NSEDC End-ofyear community benefit share.

After reading and hearing proposals from helping and educational groups, the Council split the money thusly: Nome Emergency Shelter Team, $10,000; Nome Preschool Association, $10,000; Nome Imagination Library, $10,000; Nome Volunteer Fire Dept. Search and Rescue, $34,700; Norton Sound Regional Corporation injury prevention program, $4,300, Nome Community Center Boys and Girls Club, $15,000; a consortium comprising Nome Eskimo Community, NSHC

In other business, the Council:

WASSIP study unable to genetically identify Norton Sound chum salmon

New migration data may help reduce chum bycatch in pollock fishery

By Laurie McNicholas

Western Alaskans who depend on chum salmon were keenly disappointed in one outcome of a six-year study, "Stock Composition of Chum Salmon Harvests in Fisheries of the Western Alaska Salmon Stock Identification Program (WASSIP), 2007-2009," published recently by the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game. A WASSIP goal was to genetically separate out chum stocks that originate in Norton Sound, the Yukon, the Kuskokwim and Bristol Bay. Researchers were not able to do that. However, the study produced a vast amount of information on chum and sockeye migrations, genetic baselines and DNA markers.

The research program sampled commercial and subsistence chum and sockeye salmon fisheries from Chignik Bay to Kotzebue Sound. Nearly 320,000 samples were collected and 156,000 samples were analyzed at the ADF&G Gene Conservation Laboratory to estimate stock composition in fishery harvests Western Alaska stakeholder groups involved in the WASSIP study with ADF&G were the Aleut Corp., Aleutians East Borough, Assn. of Village Council Presidents, Bering Sea Fishermen's Assn., Bristol Bay Native Assn., Concerned Area M Fishermen, Kawerak, Lake and Peninsula Borough, Tanana Chiefs Conference and Yukon River Drainage Fisheries Assn.

Norton Sound residents hoped the WASSIP study would genetically identify chum stocks originating in the region to help them determine the cause of severely depleted chum runs in some of the area's rivers, including those in the Nome subdistrict. Migrating chum salmon bound for western Alaska are intercepted in the Area M sockeye salmon fishery managed by ADF&G, and they are taken as bycatch in the federally managed Bering Sea pollock fishery. Salmon are prohibited species in the pollock fishery, but they are caught incidentally in large nets towed by trawlers.

Chum bycatch management

The North Pacific Fishery Management Council is considering alternatives for a management plan to reduce chum bycatch in the pollock fishery. Chum bycatch occurs almost exclusively in the fishery's B season (June through October). Most Chinook (king) salmon bycatch takes place in the A season (January-May), but Chinook also are caught in the latter part of the B season.

The council's objectives for a chum bycatch management plan are (1) to motivate the pollock fleet to avoid chum salmon while (2) achieving optimum yield from the pollock fishery and (3) avoiding any potential increase in Chinook (king) salmon bycatch. A Chinook bycatch management plan called Amendment 91 was implemented in 2011. The council has stated that chum bycatch management measures should focus to the extent possible on reducing impacts to Alaska chum salmon as a top priority.

Impacts of the proposed management measures are evaluated in a draft environmental assessment commonly called "the analysis." Scientists estimate how many adult chums in the bycatch would have returned to their areas of origin if they had not been caught in pollock trawl nets. That's the adult equivalency (AEQ). The AEQ results and genetic analysis of chum bycatch samples from 2005-2009 were used to estimate the proportion of AEQ that originated in six different regions.

The analysis indicates that about 58 percent of the AEQ originates from Asian stocks (Russian and Japanese stocks), with smaller segments from coastal western Alaska (12 percent); the upper Yukon (fall chum, about 7 percent); southwest Alaska, including Kodiak river systems and north and south Alaska Peninsula (about 2 percent); and the Pacific Northwest from Prince William Sound to Washington and Oregon (22 percent).

The analysis also indicates that Alaska stocks form a higher proportion of chum bycatch earlier in the summer (June-July) than later the season (August-October). Some alternatives address the June-July timeframe.

The analysis averages the AEQ attributed to coastal western Alaska stocks and Upper Yukon stocks across rivers in the regions, yielding impact rates that are so small they are not likely to jeopardize sustainability of the stocks. Representatives of Western Alaska organizations say that tells them nothing about the actual impacts of chum bycatch on small, weak stocks in the regions.

Minimize chum bycatch

"Minimizing bycatch of chum salmon is extremely important given the relatively small sizes of chum salmon escapement to key stream systems in Western Alaska," reads a letter to the NPFMC dated Nov. 27. 2012 and co-signed by representatives of the Assn. of Village Council Presidents, Bering Sea Fishermen's Assn., Kawerak, Tanana Chiefs Conference and Yukon River Drainage Fisheries Assn. "Because of small escapements, a bycatch of even several thousand fish may inadvertently take the lion's share of escapement to a stream system essential to the economic survival of villages.

"The current analysis, however, continues to assess impacts on a western Alaska-wide basis," the letter continues. "While we understand that the current chum salmon genetic baseline does not allow for separation of Western Alaska stocks, this masks impacts on smaller, weaker stocks. For instance, Norton Sound chum salmon, which have suffered severe declines, are included in a coastal Western Alaska grouping. By assessing impacts on the regional scale suggested by the stock groupings represented in the genetics, the analysis underestimates the impacts on weaker stocks...."

The letter requests that the EA be revised to: "Provide additional qualitative analysis on the use of the AEQ and how the impacts to individual river systems may vary annually, depending upon when and where bycatch occurs...."

During a council meeting on chum bycatch measures this month in Anchorage, Nome resident Charlie Lean cited information about chum migrations in the WASSIP report that may help the pollock fleet avoid catching western Alaska chums. Lean, who directs fisheries development and research for Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. testified on behalf of the NSEDC board of directors.

"They read through the analysis, and we also participated in the WAS-SIP analysis," Lean said. "We drew some from the WASSIP analysis because it had a little bit more specificity in stocks. It talked about the Kotzebue stock. We found that interesting and also drew from that there is a pulse of adult chum salmon that migrate through the fishery immediately adjacent to the pollock fishery and also further north, and it's a relatively brief timeframe, like two weeks long. It probably peaks in the pollock fishery in late June for about 10 days, two weeks, and we take this as an opportunity to capitalize on."

Lean said the NSEDC board supports a June-July hardcap on chum bycatch at the lowest rate, 15,600 fish, because it incentivizes everybody in the pollock fleet to focus on the June-July timeframe. "We would COMBINED— King Island dancers and Little Diomede dancers performed together during the Kawerak Regional Conference in May 2012.

King Island Dance Group and Diomede Dancers join to keep traditions alive

By Diana Haecker

The King Island Dance Group grew recently as they joined forces with dancers from Little Diomede, called the Inaliq Dancers.

At community functions in Nome this year it was noticeable that more dancers entertained crowds, may it have been at the Kawerak Regional conference in spring, the Grand Opening of the new hospital or the recent Native Pride Month celebration at the Rec Center.

It started with the young men forming friendships between Nome and Little Diomede. King Islanders Ben "Adat" Payenna and Bryan Muktoyuk befriended the late Chris Ahkinga. "Chris and I, we used to exchange songs over the phone," remembers Bryan Muktoyuk. At that time, King Island dancers didn't get together more than once a year for practicing and it seemed like the drumming and dancing would fade into the background.

Muktoyuk encouraged Chris Ahkinga to move to Nome, get a job and then they would combine dance groups. The idea, Payenna said, was to combine the dance groups to not loose the tradition of Eskimo drumming and dancing. "There are so few young people left who know how to properly sing and dance," said Payenna.

They invited Inaliq Dancers who had moved to Nome to join King Island practices and they accepted. King Island Elder Vince Pikonganna added that his father, when growing up on King Island, always said, that if they loose Eskimo dancing, they'd loose everything. "I'm so glad that these young men pick it up," Pikonganna said. "Once it's in your heart, it'll never let go of you." The seed has been planted and it's growing.

Muktoyuk said that indeed, dancing is so much part of him that it inspires him to learn everything about the culture of his forefathers. "Everything that is King Island, I want to know," he said in a recent interview with The Nome Nugget at the King Island IRA.

There is more to singing and drumming than meets the eye, explain the young dancers. Bryan Muktoyuk, at age 33, and having grown up singing and dancing, still considers himself a "pup." Ben Payenna has only recently begun to dance, but his forté is making drums. They stress that it's all about singing the songs properly, adhering to proper etiquette and singing and performing dances with respect and the way the composer had meant them to be sung and performed. Some of the songs are ancient and in language the younger dancers don't understand anymore.

Vince Pikonganna grew up on King Island. He was born in Nome, a summer baby, he chuckles, and then spent winters with the King Island tribe on the island. The King Islanders call themselves Ugiuvangmiut (ah-vee-va- mee-yut), meaning the People of the Wintering Place. "It was so much fun growing up on King Island," he said. After the greens have been picked and put away in seal oil, the meat stored for the summer, the King Islanders would get into their umiaks and travel to Nome to carve and sell their carvings.

Pikonganna said that about 150 or 160 people lived on King Island and that winter nights were filled with dancing and drumming. "How I learn singing and drumming was at the club house," Pikonganna said. "My dad put me on his lap and drum. I listened and that's how I learned the songs."

In order to teach new singers, the King Islanders would put them in between two good singers so that they are exposed with an ancient "surround sound" of how songs are sung correctly. If a new song was introduced, Pikoganna said, the composer sang it once to the group and they then picked it up and sang it how the composer wanted it performed. Nowadays, Bryan Muktoyuk says, you listen. "You listen to the songs and let it sink into your head." Then he wakes up with the song in his head the next morning, sings it to his kids in the morning and they pick it up, even if it's just unconsciously. "See, you can't make your kids learn it. If they don't want to, I wouldn't force it on them," said Muktoyuk.

When Pikonganna was about 12 years old, in 1960, the BIA school closed on the island and the King Islanders had to move to Nome for good. Pikonganna didn't speak English and had to learn it as a second language. Nowadays, there are only a hundred or so speakers left who can converse in the King Island dialect, Pikonganna said. "We need a Rosetta Stone for the King Island dialect," said Muktoyuk, adding that he grew up speaking English. He said although he understands the King Island dialect, Elders sometimes speak and sing ancient songs that he and the younger generation don't understand. With the emphasis of dancing and singing properly, that hampers the passing on of songs.

For example, Pikonganna said, most polar bear songs were sung in this ancient language. The polar bear songs tell details of a particular hunt of a polar bear. The songs describe who the hunter was, what season the hunt took place, what weapons were used, if the hunter approached the bear by foot or umiak and how it was killed. "The polar bear was greatly revered and respected," Pikonganna said.

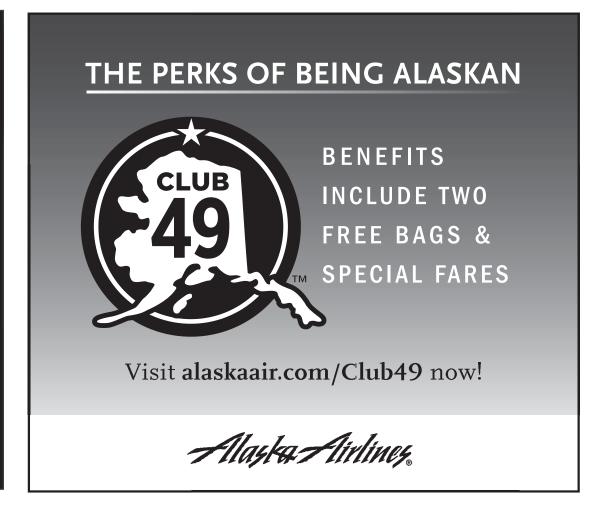

The hunter would tell the tale to a composer of songs who put the story and the song together. Then the composer would take the song to the club house and sing it how it's meant to be performed. And that's how it from then on should always be performed. No artistic interpretation allowed, because that would be disrespectful to the "owner of the song." This etiquette goes for every song, as some are passed on within families and should only be performed with permission and in the proper way, said Muktoyuk.

Pikonganna remembers the last singing of a polar bear song, when he was 12 years old, on King Island. He said he and his friend had hunted two snow buntings with bow and arrow, and a hunter had killed a polar bear. In the clubhouse that night, there was the skull of the polar bear hanging off the ceiling, and the two snow buntings as well. The polar bear skull was filled with water and as long as it dripped down, they would sing and dance that night. Pikonganna remembers being very nervous on that magical night. "We were the last young people on King Island to be part of a polar bear dance," he said. The dance was performed to release the spirit of the bear and the birds. "I remember dancing the best I could that night," said Pikonganna. He added that the people listened for the ice to make the sound of cracking during the dance. "If it cracks the polar bear spirit has been released and it's walking on the ice to wherever the polar bears go back to its kind," Pikonganna said.

The King Island Dancers with the Diomede dance group try to keep the tradition alive, by practicing together and performing at functions and festivals in the region. Muktoyuk said continued on page 12

2012 - The year in review

January

Nome made worldwide headlines with the historic fuel delivery that arrived per Russian tanker Renda under escort by the U.S.Coast Guard icebreaker Healy.

The Renda had 1.3 million gallons of fuel on board and was hired by Vitus Marine to deliver the goods. The epic journey of the two ships was slowed by 300 miles of ice and pressure ridges to bust through, by super cold weather and human fatigue. Plus it took a while for the Renda and the Healy to find common ground and to work together on figuring out how to travel through the sea ice in convoy.

On January 13, both ships showed up on the horizon at Nome and by January 15 they were parked and frozen in outside of the Nome harbor for the transfer of fuel to begin.

The midwinter fuel delivery was caused by a failed fall fuel delivery to Bonanza fuel by Delta Western.

January also turned out to be one of the coldest months in the history of Nome. An extended cold spell lasted for almost three weeks when temperatures didn't rise above minus 30°F.

State regulators signed off on a Rock Creek gold mine closure plan. NovaGold Resources Inc. put the failed gold mine up for sale. Bering Straits Native Corporation and Sitnasuak Corp. contemplated the acquisition of the mine.

February

After a five-year hiatus, the Norton Sound/Bering Strait salmon regional planning team met in Nome, and decided to come up with a new comprehensive salmon plan. Members of the public gave input and commented that they wanted more salmon and that they are in favor of salmon run enhancement projects.

The purpose of the regional planning team, or RPT, is to develop a regional comprehensive salmon plan, to make recommendations for private non-profit hatchery permits and for fish resource permits.

The main actions taken during the meeting were appointing Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game's Sam Rabung as the RTP chair and getting the ball rolling on updating a plan Rabung said that as commercial fisheries in the Norton Sound and Bering Strait area declined over the years, so did the money for the RAA. To complicate matters, there were two very similarly named aquaculture associations, one chaired by Tim Smith called the Norton Sound/Bering Strait Regional Aquaculture Association and the one led by Oscar Takak, called Norton Sound/Bering Straits Regional Aquaculture Association. The latter is recognized by ADF&G, but Tim Smith contested the validity of the recognition.

The State's Northern Waters Task Force came out with recommendations to the State Legislature on how to prepare Alaska for the onslaught of development in the wake of Arctic warming. It recommended to meaningfully involve Alaskans in Arctic policy and outer continental shelf developments.

A second recommendation states that Alaska is not prepared for the on-slaught of ship traffic, oil and gas interests jockeying for position to exploit the Arctic's riches and for the fishing industry chasing migrating fish stocks up north.

"The State of Alaska has only just begun to grapple with the challenges and opportunities developing in the far north," the task force report reads.

The task force finds that the state needs to get involved and needs to assume a leadership role in the development of policies. The task force is pressing for the creation of a commission to develop a comprehensive state strategy for the Arctic. When the Arctic was merely a cold, dark and inhospitable environment covered by multi-year ice, Arctic governance was easy. Now that the sea ice is diminishing and the possibilities of vast oil and gas field developments arise, "it becomes painfully clear that governance structures are inadequate," the NWTF report said.

The Nome Nanooks boys basketball team won almost every tournament they enter.

Bethel musher Peter Kaiser won the inaugural Paul Johnson Memorial sled dog race put on by Unalakleet's Norton Sound Sled Dog Club. Kaiser took home $11,000. Also competing were John Schandelmeier, Richie Diehl, Louie Ambrose, Michelle Phillips, Judie Currier, DeeDee Jonrowe and her handler Jamie Kinzer and Gerald Sousa.

In Gambell, Robert McCoy pledged to make a difference in village life and formed a boxing team called Sivuqaq Science boxing team.

His goal was to teach kids self-control, self discipline, history and ethical behavior and passing on nutritional information. The team was going strong throughout the year and managed, through fundraisers, to purchase gear for everybody.

March

Bonanza Fuel sought legal action against Delta Western fuel suppliers, which allegedly caused retail distributor Bonanza Fuel to spend more than $1.5 million on the famous midwinter fuel delivery.

Bonanza Fuel alleges that Delta Western barges did not deliver a promised 1.3 million gallons of fuel before fall freeze-up and that its failure to honor a contract caused Bonanza to have to get the remainder of its winter supply delivered through Vitus Marine with the Russian tanker Renda at extra cost, Bonanza said.

Bonanza wants DW to make the $1.5 million good, plus legal costs and other expenses the court deems proper. Bonanza asked for a jury trial. The cost to the City of Nome and the Port of Nome to assist the oil transfer tallied up to $42,000.

U.S. Coast Guard Rear Admiral Thomas Ostebo came to Nome and revealed plans to expand deployment of ships and helicopters to the Arctic in preparation for increasing ship traffic and oil and gas exploration in the Chukchi and Beaufort seas.Ostebo and Captain Greg Sanial met with a dozen tribal and community leaders and briefed them about what the region can expect from the Coast Guard in the near future as they geared up for Operation Arctic Shield.

Marc McKenna of Anchorage and Dusty VanMeter of Kasilof won the 2012 Iron Dog race; Tre West of Nome and his partner Tyler Huntington of Fairbanks came in second.

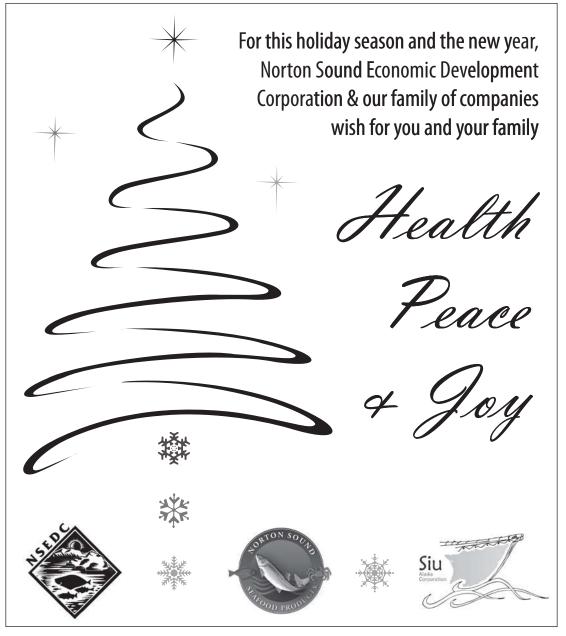

The Norton Sound Health Corporation's Environmental Health Office brought regional delegates together in Nome for an Environmental Conference that tackled issues such as solid waste and recycling, climate change and adaptation, mining impacts and watershed protection, proposed outer continental shelf oil and gas development and the protection of the subsistence lifestyle.

An effort was made to form a regional watershed alliance that would incorporate waters flowing into Norton Sound and the Bering Strait.

While winter still had a firm grip on Nome, the City of Nome and the State Dept. of Natural Resources were bracing for an unknown number of miners to arrive in Nome, brought on by the popular TV show that hit the airwaves in early 2012 called "Bering Sea Gold". The reality show featured Nome gold dredgers and the drama surrounding the quest for gold. Nome Gold Alaska revealed plans to open an industrial camp ground at Dredge 6 to accommodate miners and their equipment in the summer.

John Bahnke III won the Nome-Golovin race, edging out secondplace finisher Evan Booth. The race took 38 racers over a rough trail from Nome to Golovin and back.

The 2011-2012 basketball season was one to remember as the Nome Nanooks boys basketball team wrapped up the season with a third place finish in the 3A State Championships in Anchorage.

Anril

The 2011/2012 winter went into the history books as the second coldest winter on record since the beginning of weather data collection in Nome in 1907. The average temperature measured -5.4° F, not quite reaching the all-time record set in1970/1971 of -9.6° F. "Our weather to March 20, the region suffered through the second coldest winter on record," said Jerry Steiger, Nome National Weather Service meteorologist in chief. After Christmas, a three-week stretch of temperatures below -30° F contributed to the distinction that January 2012 was the coldest January on record.

With the promotion of Alaska State Trooper Sgt. Andrew Merrill to a Lieutenant's position and the post of the Deputy Commander of the Trooper's C Detachment in Anchorage, a new Sergeant moved to Nome to head up the Alaska State Trooper post. New Sgt. Charlie Cross was born in Nome and was raised in Nome, Kotzebue and Elim.

Q Trucking started work on the difficult task to remove the barge Lulu out of the frozen harbor ice. The task couldn't be finished and the port commission extended the deadline to have Lulu removed.

The Kawerak Regional Conference brought delegates together from the region to discuss issues of climate change, subsistence and cooperation between regional, state and federal agencies.

As part of the conference, the Regional Planning Team for a salmon enhancement plan gathered once again with the ambition to update a salmon enhancement project plan. Participants aired their frustrations but not much planning got done.

ADF&G's Sam Rabung said that the consensus was that everybody has the desire to have more fish.

All differences aside, this is the thing that unites everybody, Rabung said.

The meeting ended with the decision that Rabung, NSED's Charlie Lean and ADF&G's Jim Menard would flesh out a draft of the comprehensive salmon plan, take it back to the RPT, collect input from that body and take the result as a starting point for discussion to the 16 Norton Sound and Bering Strait communities to gather local input.

As of the end of 2012, meetings are planned to gather input for the development of the new plan.

Meetings are slated to begin in early 2013.

The Nome Port Commission set fees for port users, including a new fee for gold dredges tying up at the banks of the Snake River, where moorage used to be for free.

Alaska Tobacco Control Alliance held its 6th annual summit in Nome. It brought about 85 tobacco control professionals to Nome for a three-day conference to educate, learn and share the messages of tobacco control strategies. They selected Nome as the venue of their annual meeting because Nome in 2011 passed a city ordinance banning smoking in all public places.

Three new Port of Nome commissioners were sworn in: Mike Sloan, Randy Romenesko and Iura Leahu.

Seventy of Nome's kids, not deterred by ice cold temperatures, participated in the National Lemonade Day.

Governor Sean Parnell signed the state budget, doling out money for Nome and regional projects:

$5 million for the Nome State building and courthouse - which was later reconsidered as the governor preferred the option to renovate the existing building rather than to build a new one. Nome harbor improvements: $1.5 million; Nome Airport runway safety area improvements (federal funds) $46.7 million; Norton Sound Health Corp. Quyanna Care facility construction: $7.55 million; Nome-Council road repair mile 4 to 16 (federal funds): $2.5 million; Nome east Sclaircore replacement and expansion, phase 2: $ 3.09 million; Nome renewable energy expansion and optimization: $4.07 million; Nome multi-purpose loader and blower: $600,000; Anvil Mountain Correctional Center deferred maintenance: $1.7 million. Region wide the following projects made it into the budget: Tucked away in the operating budget, Little Diomede received $200,000 in Essential Air Service funding, which with matching funds, now makes it possible to provide regular passenger service to and from Little Diomede. In November, the first passenger flight provided by Evergreen Helicopters, took place between Nome and Diomede.

As the Coast Guard, the State Dept of Natural Resources and the City of Nome readied for an unknown number of miners expected in Nome for the gold digging season, but a local mining permit fee to recover costs generated by the gold rush died in Nome council chambers.

The City had proposed a permit costing $500 to $1,000 per season to help with extra costs of enforcing civil and criminal issues among mining tourists touched with gold fever.

Registration at the Port of Nome harbor office was hoped to keep track of who was offshore mining.

The 2012 Norton Sound commercial sac roe fishery was cancelled due to extensive ice cover in Norton Sound. Ice prevented the processor and tenders from reaching the Norton Sound region for over a week.

Ice breaking loose from southern Norton Sound and further south, large pans and bergs have accumulated on the Norton Sound herring fishing grounds, hindering any fishing opportunity, said Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation.

Red king crab catches fetched record high prices this season for the second year in a row. Norton Sound Seafood Products paid $5.50 per pound for red king crab at the dock in Nome, and $5.25 a pound for catches delivered to tender vessels. Dock prices for red king crab were $5.29 a pound in 2011 and $3.77 a pound in 2010.

Bering Straits Native Corporation signed a purchase and sale agreement to take over the Rock Creek mine from NovaGold for an undisclosed amount. BSNC had a prior agreement with NovaGold as the regional Native corporation owns the subsurface mining rights to the majority of the 3,500-acre Rock Creek mine and mill complex. Sitnasuak Native Corporation owns the surface rights. The transfer of the Rock Creek property to BSNC was contingent on closing conditions that included the successful completion of phase I of the reclamation plan. The transfer became final in November 2012.

On July 12, an early morning fire in Teller threatened to rip through the whole village. In the end, it consumed the former Blodgett store, the Mary's Igloo Traditional Council building and two other vacant buildings belonging to the Blodgett family. There were no injuries. Nome Volunteer firefighters jumped on a Bering Air plane to rush to Teller. Other Nome fire department volunteers drove the 70 miles to aid in the battle against the flames.

Troopers identified juveniles as suspects of having started the fire.

The Nome Common Council voted 4-2 to allow Kawerak, Inc. to participate in planning and using space in the yet to be built Richard Foster Building to house the city's museum. Kawerak has offered money for maintenance and operation as well as lease income. Practical realization of the resolution depends on the City of Nome and Kawerak Inc. arriving at a memorandum of understanding establishing a management and operation plan for the facility.

One of the biggest projects to begin this summer was the Snake River Bridge replacement. The $ 8.5 million contract was awarded on July 5 to Pro-West Contractors. The existing bridge north of the power plant will be replaced by a new bridge that is designed to cross the Snake River 300 feet southeast of the Center Creek Road and connect to Jafet Drive. The project progressed quickly this summer and is to be completed by October 1, 2013.

Prisoners at the Anvil Mountain Correctional Center had to contend with rationed water use for three days as AMCC officials scrambled to get the septic system of the facility fixed and up and running again. AMCC superintendent Michael Dunham said that the reason was a septic tank full of sludge that did not separate the liquids from the solids anymore and pushed the entire waste out to a leech field that is only intended to receive liquids. The problem was fixed after a few days.

The National Snow and Ice Data Center reported that the Arctic sea ice has broken the 2007 record for minimum ice coverage and is the lowest since satellites are used to track sea ice. The Arctic sea ice extent fell to 1.58 million square miles on August 26. According to NSIDC, this was 27,000 square miles below the September 18, 2007 daily extent of 1.61 million square miles. The sea ice melted at near-2007 levels through July, but then started to rapidly decline faster in early August.

After the run-off elections on November 6. City Council incumbents Randy Pomeranz and Stan Andersen defended their seats against challengers Randy Oles and Jim West Jr. Council member Mary Knodel resigned effective October 1 after many years of service on the Council. The civil lawsuit of Bonanza Fuel vs. Delta Western, over who foots the bill of a botched fall fuel delivery that necessitated a mid-winter fuel delivery to Nome, got juicier when Bonanza added another claim to its complaint.

Delta Western maintained that weather and winter freeze-up on the Bering Sea made a mid-November delivery by barge impractical. Not so, Bonanza said in a revised complaint. Documents show that K-Sea Barge 79 was ready to go to Nome with a shipment for Bonanza when Delta Western diverted it from its path to satisfy a much larger order of 6 million gallons of diesel for Red Dog Mine near Kotzebue. That turnaround took precious time. Bonanza added an additional claim for knowing misrepresentation or deceit, as well as a claim for punitive damages for "outrageous misconduct in breaching and repudiating its con-

On November 1, the transition of new ownership of the Rock Creek Mine and the Alaska Gold Company became final. Little Diomede residents can plan a trip and can expect to return home without being delayed for weeks in Wales or Nome.

For the first time ever, there is a year-round, regularly scheduled passenger flight service between Little Diomede and Wales or Nome, as state and federal agencies share a program that subsidizes passenger service to the island. Evergreen flew its first passenger flight to Diomede at the end of November.

Test results aimed to shed light on oiled seals and birds about the where, why, what and by whom came back inconclusive. The Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation tested samples from a seal harvested in Gambell and one seal harvested in Shishmaref, both showing oil on their fur. The tests confirmed heavy degraded oil. A US Coast Guard lab returned testing samples for the same seals, saying that the samples from the Gambell seal did not contain a quantity of petroleum oil detectable by the analysis conducted. Photos posted around regional villages and Nome showed seals, bellies soaked in a brown substance. According to DEC and USCG, the investigation continues and lab data is being organized and analyzed.

In the last city council meeting of this year, the council decided to take Mike Benchoff to court.He has been in violation of Port of Nome rules and let his tug boat Rustler freeze in the harbor once again.

Youth dance group perpetuates tradition of Eskimo dancing

By Diana Haecker

It's Friday 3 p.m. and the sounds of the drums echo through the halls of Nome-Beltz Jr./Sr. High School. About a dozen teenagers clad in jeans, hoodies, ball caps and sneakers, gather every Monday and Friday after school in Nadejda Soudakova's Native Studies classroom to practice Eskimo dancing. The room resembles a workshop with concrete floor and high ceilings, not cozy, but it has space to line up chairs in a row and for dancers to position themselves facing the drummers sitting on the chairs. It suits the purpose.

The dozen or so teenagers, mostly juniors at the school, nervously giggle about the prospect of "making the paper." They want to dance, not talk.

Just then, dance group leader Linda Kimoktoak rushes in, it's late, and the truck wouldn't start. It's very cold outside.

Some dancers already started to warm up. The drumming starts and all are focused and present in the their practice. Dezirae Sherman-Kakaruk, Jaylen Gologergen and Sara Iyapana explain that they had the idea to start a dance group in 2008. "We wanted to learn from the Elders before they're gone," said Sherman-Kakaruk. She and Sara Iyapana regularly attend King Island dance practices and bring King Island dances to their dance group. But it is 17-year old Jaylen Gologergen, of St. Lawrence Island heritage, who teaches them most of the songs and dances. Who decides what dances to learn? Jaylen. Who teaches the dances and songs? Jaylen. Who is gathering more songs for their repertoire? You guessed it, it's Jaylen. The group can perform 22 dances from the traditions of King Island, Little Diomede as well as St. Lawrence Island. What started with the three has grown into a group of more then ten drummers and dancers. They used to practice on their own, Sherman-Kakaruk said, every day except for Monday in the fifth period. As the practice gets underway and the drumming gets louder, younger students trickle in, sit down and watch.

Are there any requirements to join the club? "No, just show up to practice," said Linda Kimoktoak, "We teach everybody who wants to learn.

Jaylen Gologergen starts hitting the drum and the other drummers follow his lead. Briar Dickson has learned drumming from the King Island dancers at the Alaska Native Heritage Center in Anchorage. He said that Roy Michael made the drum for him. It is made out of a high-tech fabric, with a wooden frame and sports a picture of a dancing wolf.

Linda Kimoktoak began volunteering with the dance group a few months ago. "Mr. Handley [the principal] had contacted me to help teach the class," Kimoktoak said. And that's when the group became more visible to Nomeites as they performed at various community functions. Acting as the manager and coach, Kimoktoak and the dancers performed at the grand opening of the new hospital, the Nome celebration of the Native American Heritage Month and the Christmas Extravaganza. Prior to that, the group had their first performance in 2010 at the school.

Kimoktoak said that the kids work very hard on getting their dances right. Her goal is to have a letter jacket designed with a big N - for Nanooks — by the end of the school year, for the dancers and drummers of the High School Cultural Dance

The teenagers are done talking, the drums are sounding and the girls line up to dance. They smile from ear to ear, happy to be dancing, but shy in front of the visitor with the big camera taking their pictures. Nervous? "Yes, when we perform we all have butterflies in our stomach," Dezirae says. "But then we all encourage each other and have fun."

that they are also trying to raise funds to be able to travel and perform at statewide events such as the annual convention of the Alaska Federation of Natives. In taking great pride in learning and performing properly, their goal is to sound and dance in perfect harmony.

"When we practice, we try to sound as one voice and one drum, just as our ancestors wanted it," Muktoyuk. When a singer hits a wrong tone, he's gently corrected. In the old days, the whole group would stop drumming and let the singer know how it's done right. Nowadays it's done by positively encouraging them, says Pikonganna.

The older and best singers sit in the middle, the younger ones are sitting toward the sides. Usually, performances start with a welcome dance, open to all to participate. In the first round, the song is not sung with words but chanted. The second go-around, the words are sung. "With the welcome dance, we express that people are most welcome to participate in the dance. We express that if you are a visitor, you are most welcome and we want you to feel at home," Pikonganna said. And then come the other dances.

"If many young men and women get up to do the welcome dance, the drummers then will continue on with the so-called fixed motion dances, such as the wolf dance, the raven, walrus and noisy twins dance. Those have to be done the right way, no freestyle is allowed in the welcome dances, and thus no visitors should be getting up and joining in. Then come the bench dances, Muktoyuk said, and those have a lot of words to them.

In the end, performances usually conclude with another round of welcome dances where everybody can get up and dance.

The combined King Island and Little Diomede dance groups try to meet for practice once a week, but there is one person missing. Chris Ahkinga was killed in a four-wheeler accident in Nome this year. His friends Ben Payenna and Bryan Muktoyuk traveled to the island for his memorial and danced and drummed for two nights. Most visitors left, but Muktoyuk said he stayed behind, drumming and dancing for two weeks, every night to honor his friend. His legacy lives on in the joined dance groups and the prospect that the tradition will be passed on to another generation.

suggest a closer examination of that pulse of adult fish moving to western Alaska, and we hope that could be better addressed in a future analysis," he added.

Lean later explained to The Nome Nugget that adult chums migrating into western Alaska are bunched together in the Unimak Island area in late June and early July. He said it is easy to distinguish them from Asian chums, which are smaller than western Alaska chums. The analysis says the pollock fleet's core fishing grounds are north of Unimak Island (Executive Summary, p. xvii).

Lean told the council the NSEDC board favors Alternative 3 among the measures proposed for chum bycatch management. Alternative 3 is a revised version of the current Rolling Hot Spot (RHS) system, which is designed to reduce chum bycatch by moving the fleet away from areas where it is occurring. The system is administered by Sea State, a private company that compiles bycatch and location reports from vessels participating in the RHS inter-cooperative agreement and from the National Marine Fisheries Service, and then closes areas of high bycatch called hot spots.

"The reason they like the Rolling Hot Spot program is because it has immediate effects," Lean said. "You see a problem, you address it right now."

Council chairman Erik Olson asked Lean if the NSEDC board has discussed the tradeoffs between chum bycatch protection measures that may push fishing effort into the later part of the year and negatively affect Chinook salmon bycatch.

"They did, and we understand that the later the pollock fishery goes, the greater the risk to Chinook," Lean replied. "The interest here is to focus on that pulse of fish.... We think there's a critical period in there."

Art Nelson, policy director, Bering Sea Fishermen's Assn., told the council he supports Lean's request to protect the large proportion of adult chum salmon migrating through the south Alaska Peninsula fishery in June to western Alaska streams. "They're in the neighborhood of 50 to 60 percent western Alaska origin when they're on the south side of the peninsula, and is there a very discrete time and area window when we can protect those fish as they're rounding the corner on their way home?" Nelson asked.

Bad actors targeted

Nelson said a strong aspect of the RHS system has been public disclosure of vessels that take a large proportion of chum bycatch. "I think part of the analysis should look at a vessel by vessel analysis of the bycatch over the years to see really how consistent are those dirty performances, and then craft the program with some parameters to really get down on those people," he said. "I don't know the numbers, but I've looked at the data from a distance long enough to see some consistent vessel names at the top of the lists, and do we have 10, 20 percent of the fleet causing 40, 50 percent of the bycatch?

"An important part of this to keep that public disclosure going forward with whatever comes out of this," Nelson added. "It was unfortunate that after the Chinook action that public disclosure stopped. We stopped getting the updates from this fleet about what's going on, and I wish that could be revisited and put back into the Chinook component as well."

Paul Peyton of Bristol Bay Economic Development Corp. expressed support for a change in the RHS system to deal with pollock vessels that consistently take high rates of salmon bycatch.

"There is a subset of the fleet that frequently continues to fish in areas of high bycatch until the area closures, even though they know that the bycatch is occurring, and then they go right outside the area and continue to fish around the edge of the area closures and frequently encounter the fish that move out of the box," Peyton noted in testimony to the council. "This dilutes the efforts of the remainder of the fleet that don't undertake that behavior. We think that it would be easy to tell this by examining the old Dirty 20 list." Administrators of the RHS system periodically compiled lists of 20 vessels with the highest bycatch rates compared to a base rate.

"There's a high degree of persistence to who's on it, and it's also, unfortunately, across species," Peyton added. "What that suggests is that there is probably a mechanism to identify that behavior, and perhaps there is a way to provide an additional level of command and control that says, 'Don't do that.""

Council tables analysis

Several pollock industry representatives sharply criticized the analysis of the revised RHS system, including findings based on an assumption that the pollock fleet would not change its behavior in relation to specific proposed chum bycatch management measures. The council decided on Dec. 8 to place the current analysis on hold, and asked each pollock fishery sector to provide a proposal detailing how they would incorporate a western Alaska chum salmon avoidance program, with vessel level accountability, within their existing incentive plan agreement (IPA) for the Chinook salmon bycatch management program, Amendment 91.

Amendment 91 combines a limit on the amount of Chinook salmon bycatch with IPAs and a performance standard. The plan is designed to minimize bycatch to the extent practicable in all years and to prevent bycatch from reaching the limit in most years, while providing the pollock fleet with the flexibility to harvest the total allowable catch.

CHEERING FOR NURSE RYAN— Vivienne Heers holds up a sign, congratulating nurse Amber Ryan.

associate director of UAA's School of Nursing, said at the ceremony. "Quite the accomplishment!"

After congratulatory words from representatives of Norton Sound Health Corporation, Northwest Campus and Kawerak, Inc., students shared stories of their journey through two difficult years, thanking family, friends and funders for unwavering support.

"Before the program began, I felt excited for the challenge lying ahead of me," Ryan said. "I have to admit I was a little nervous even before the program began, but I felt so determined to succeed."

Ryan credited some of her success to a message shared years before by her grandfather, Fred Ryan. "People live up to their perception of our expectations of their performance," Fred Ryan had written. "More simply, people respond to the level of confidence you show in them. Many of us have had an important experience in our lives where someone has believed in us. The linkage is quite simple: My parents believe in me, or my coach, my teacher, or my boss believes in me, so I believe in me."

an interest in her mom's nursing career and her father's certainty that someday his daughter would go to college.

"Nursing school is hard," Weaver said. "Getting up at 5 a.m. to attend a full day of clinical, returning to the hospital at night to do pre-clinical for the next day, staying up until one in the morning to write care plans, all while studying for exams and writing papers ... and then doing it all again the next day. I'm glad my friends still know what I look like!"

Bridgett Watkins, a NSHC nurse who was UAA's Nome instructor, described the rigor of the program and praised the students for their determination.

"This is the time that I no longer call you my students, nor I your instructor," Watkins, full of emotion, told the students at the end of the ceremony, "but consider you my fellow nurses, my colleagues, teammates and friends."

Nome's second group of nursing students will start classes in January.

UAA had eyed Nome as a nursing outreach site in 2005 but took no action because potential students had not been identified and training facilities were limited.

In fall 2007, Northwest Campus and NSHC approached UAA to ask for a Nome program to train local nurses in preparation for the opening of the new hospital.

UAA staff listed what would be required, and for the next three years the Bering Strait Health Consortium—a team of agencies that organizes health field trainings in the region—worked hard to find four students who could complete all nursing program prerequisites by spring 2011; find a qualified local instructor; and set up a fully-equipped nursing classroom. The group also sought funds for training and living costs so students would not have to work while in school.

It wasn't until UAA accepted four students in October 2010 that the Nome program was finally established.

Health Consortium partners include NSHC, Kawerak, UAF Northwest Campus, the Nome Job Center, NACTEC, Nome Eskimo Community and other organizations.

Full funding for the students was sponsored by Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation, Sitnasuak Native Corporation, Wells Fargo, the Pioneers of Alaska Igloo #1 and Women's Auxiliary, Norton Sound Health Corporation and the Denali Commission.

Pay-back

Alaska aviation providers are finally receiving back payments from the federal government after Sen.

Mark Begich intervened with the Department of the Interior on their behalf.

In a letter to Begich from DOI Secretary Ken Salazar, Salazar said the department was taking "aggressive steps to pay vendors on an emergency basis." Salazar's comments came in response to a letter Begich wrote in late October excoriating the department for the fact that dozens of small Alaska aviation businesses hadn't been paid for flights taken by federal workers. In some cases, businesses were owed hundreds of thousands of dollars in back payment.

Salazar pointed to transition to a new payment system as the source of the problem and said that as of November 27, 47 Alaska invoices totaling $219,899 have been paid.

In response to complaints lodged by several Alaska businesses, Salazar pledged to work with Alaska aviation vendors to ease the data entry process associated with submitting invoices.

According to Joy Journeay, executive director of the Alaska Air Carriers Association, many aviation businesses are still awaiting payment, and Begich's office continues to apply pressure on the DOI to help businesses get paid.

In Alaska, dozens of aviation providers help shuttle federal workers to their job sites in the thousands of square miles managed by the federal government. Agencies like the National Park Service, Bureau of Land Management, Fish and Wildlife Service and many others rely on these small businesses to access remote areas in Alaska where the agencies have jurisdiction.

Aviation businesses still awaiting payment should contact Begich's Anchorage office at 907-271-5915 and ask for Deputy State Director Schawna Thoma for assistance.

Master promotes Tae Kwon Do students to black belts

Story and photos by Diana Haecker

For the first time in 13 years, Tae Kwon Do Senior Master Dan Scholten last week promoted two of his students to the rank of black belts. Tim Stettinger, at age 50, received the first dan (a degree of black belt) black belt and his grandson Michael Tocktoo received the youth black belt, which converts into an adult black belt status once the teenager turns 15 years old. Hunter Bellamy and 10-year-old Elijah Quandiaz were promoted from blue belt to red belt.

On Friday night, the multi purpose room at the Rec Center served as the stage for the four Tae Kwon Do students to be formally tested and promoted after a nearly three-hour, vigorous ordeal.

They had to show that they knew their PoomSe, or series of movements that resemble gracious shadow fighting against an invisible enemy. They had to show their knowledge of "one-steps," or defense movements. They were tested in their abilities and their endurance in sparring. And then they had to break wooden boards with hand strikes and foot kicks.

But the real lessons were not those of physical ability to break boards or chasing somebody punching and kicking around the fighting ring. The real achievement, Master Scholten stressed, was that through their practice of Tae Kwon Do, they are on the path to understand that balance, control of emotions and commitment to one's own health, family and community makes a person a true master.

With only a handful of family members watching, Dan Scholten and two other black belt instructors, Hank Irelan and his daughter Asaaluk Irelan, were present to witness the test and subsequent promotion. The judges were sitting on a table framed by the American flag and the Korean flag, to honor the country of Tae Kwon Do's origin.

"This is not a competition tonight, but a review of what you know," Scholten told the nervous students. "The added stress of people watching and cameras clicking is to show me how you control your emotions as well as your body. If you defend yourself on the street, you cannot be emotional because then you're not balanced," Scholten explained.

Scholten has trained Tae Kwon Do students in Nome for more than 18 years. Once at black belt level, he explained, it's about more than physical ability. It is about sharing the knowledge gained and being able to teach a student the basics of Tae Kwon Do.

As the students began performing their PoomSe, Master Scholten explained that those forms are rife with symbolism. A black belt form, for example, symbolizes a mountain sacred to the Koreans.

"This mountain is like a diamond and we try to become as diamonds, hard enough that we don't break on our problems, but that problems break on us," Scholten said.

Tae Kwon Do, he said, is not about kicking and punching, but about the commitment to one's own safety, the safety of one's family and one's community.

It instills a sense of honor in a person that ideally would help societies to thrive in harmony and safety while respecting the individual.

"We don't talk bad about anybody, but our goal is to raise everybody up," Scholten explained.

The testing progressed from the forms to one-steps and sparring.

In sparring, the students wore head, breast, shin and foot protections. Scholten explained that they were schooled in full-contact sparring. The protective measures are taken so that the students experience hitting and being hit, gaining confidence and endurance, while minimizing the potential to be injured.

The black belts as well as Hunter Bellamy were tested sparring against one opponent, but 10-year-old Elijah Quandiaz had the distinction to fight against two opponents.

Since they were not his size, Master Scholten told them to get on their knees and give Elijah at least a fighting chance against his two kneeling sparring partners.

In the end, they all had to show their ability to break boards and again, Master Scholten had this to say: "In my 40 years of practicing Tae Kwon Do, I yet have to be attacked by a board, but again it's a stress factor. If you don't believe you can break your board, you can't, no matter how strong you kick or punch." Not fearing pain and believing in one's ability are the take-home messages for this part of the test.

In the end, all performed to their Master's satisfaction and were presented with their new belts.

Stettinger and Tocktoo received framed certificates on Chinese paper.

The newly made black belts swore an oath to serve their family and community, to commit to practice Tae Kwon Do for the rest of their lives, to defend themselves, family and community, and to help others.

With that, the tension left their faces and along with a round of applause, the four students smiled relieved and happy, new belts clutched in their hands.

A Christmas Under the

By Genevieve Wheeler

This is yet another fascinating story about life in early Nome taken from the archives of the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum in Nome. It appears that "A Christmas Under the Snow" by Genevieve Wheeler was written about Christmas in Nome in 1899. It's fun and sometimes a little confusing trying to read your way through the old style of English.

Miss Wheeler describes a full moon that first Christmas in the City of Nome. Coincidentally, look for a beautiful full moon this year during Christmas week! Happy Holidays from the staff and volunteers at

The Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum

By Genevieve Wheeler

Those who like plenty of snow on Christmas should spend the day at the mining camp known as the City of Nome in Alaska where they will be literally under it, for the huge snowdrifts cover many of the houses completely, making it necessary to tunnel to the doors. Christmas here comes in the darkest season of the year; the sun appears just above the horizon, shines a short time and then disappears again making the winter almost devoid of daylight. The Bering Sea is frozen for miles and as far as the eye can see great hills of ice covered with fine snow are piled high on the ice-bound ocean. Of course there is snow-vast quantities of it. The average fall is about six feet, but this drifts and covers entirely many small dwellings and even higher. This snow is very fine almost flour like especially that which comes with a blizzard, and it packs solidly as it falls.

During the winter of which I write there were in the neighborhood of six thousand persons at Nome and distributed throughout the adjacent district; many of these were unprepared for the intense cold and were obliged to dwell in thinly boarded houses, and some even attempted to live in tents. Scores of small dwellings were completely buried in the snowdrifts, and as the snow deepened the occupants were obliged to keep adding extra stovepipe so as to keep the top of the pipe above the drift. A number of times the occupants of some of those small houses lost their lives through their neglect of this precaution. They lighted the fires before going to bed. When the snow stopped, the pipes and the gas and smoke, finding no outlet were driven down into the house and caused death by suffocation. Some of the accompanying pictures show the tunnels leading to the snow-covered houses. Some of the tunnels were 200 feet long in length under the snowdrifts, and they furnished the only means of entrance or exit. Cows and horses also were stabled in quarters deep under the snow, using similar tunnels to come and go.

The approach of Christmas in this cold bleak Northland is in strange contrast with the Christmas season in the United States. There is of course, a complete absence of the rush and bustle of the busy cities with their toy-dressed store windows and in this far-away spot one cannot rest the eyes upon holly, the ivy and the Christmas tree. Nevertheless, many parents had brought their children young and old, and where little children are there Christmas must be

To celebrate this day of days in fitting manner was the great question. The country surrounding Nome is wholly deserted of trees, so to obtain Christmas trees it became necessary to make a trip of one hundred and seventy-five miles over the ice by sled, but men were ready for this emergency, and the trees were secured. These hardy fellows started off about December tenth, and returned to Nome several days before Christmas. The trees were spruce from five to ten feet high, and were sold from five to twenty-five dollars for each tree. With Christmas at hand, toys and ornaments must be obtained. The town was well canvassed and everything resembling a toy was secured, as well as a lot of material from which to make toys. Mothers made up rag dolls, and many pretty and useful gifts were made for young and old, so that neither the little ones, who hung up their stockings on Christmas Eve, nor their elders were disappointed.

The Eskimos were not forgotten, for at the little church, the only one in camp, a festival was held, and from the Christmas trees the native children and their parents received their first gifts when the distribution took place. The church was decorated with paper flowers in place of real ones.

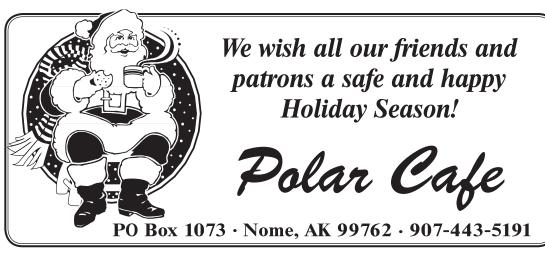

In the preparation of the Christmas dinner, which is not a pleasant nor easy task in the cold land, the housewife had her troubles, and serious troubles enough some of them proved to be. Many days before Christmas the making of the plum pudding was in progress. Water is delivered here in cans costing twenty-five cents a can, and it is almost solidly frozen. The eggs, butter, popcorn, onions, apples and everything else that can possibly freeze are frozen, making the work preparing pudding and cakes anything but an easy task. The large pot of water for the pudding seems as though it never would boil, and the stove does not seem to do half its duty. There are two things – perhaps I can call them virtues - that men and women, but especially housekeepers must learn in Alaska namely, patience and economy, the later especially in the use of water, and in this country of domestic difficulties the men must do their share of the work about the house. With Christmas trees at five to twenty-five dollars each, eggs a dollar a dozen, butter seventy-five cents to one dollar a pound, coal more than a hundred dollars a ton, and everything else proportionately expensive, it is easy to understand at least some of the differences between a Northland Christmas and one in the ordinary cities.

The pudding completed and boiled it was hung up, to be taken down, frozen solidly, though in the house, for reheating on Christmas Day. Turkey at Christmastime at Nome costs seventy-five cents to one dollar a pound, and, being taken from cold storage and frozen solid, it is a difficult matter even to guess, much less to determine, when the bird was last alive. The task of getting at the fowl to clean and dress it was no easy matter. It took ten hours by the stove in cold water to thaw it Then after preparing it on Christmas Eve it was laid away carefully in order that it might not become too solidly frozen again. Instead of crisp lettuce and celery there are canned vegetables, but appetizing salads and other tasty dishes are made as only a woman can do, and after the frozen potatoes and onions had been given a bath in boiling water for a few moments, and had the skins peeled off, and after the turkey and the cranberry sauce, with all the other good things, had been placed on the home-made dinner table covered with oilcloth, and with the plum pudding yet to come, one forgot for at least a time that one was spending Christmas Day in this most isolated region of Uncle Sam's dominions.

The first Christmas spent in this camp, and one long to be remembered, was an exceptionally clear one. The sun appeared about midday and seemed at once to set directly south. About three o'clock in the afternoon the moon rose in all its fullness and splendor at a northerly point, making the great expanse of snow and ice on the Bering Sea sparkle like diamonds, and presenting the appearance of a veritable fairyland. At this time came also the Northern Lights, and it seemed as though the very portals of Heaven had opened, bringing one in closer touch with God and His glorious infinity.

The Nome Nanooks and Lady Nanooks kicked off their basketball seasons last week against Galena. The boys started strong, defeating Galena in both games at home. In the first game, Nome won 56-53 followed by a 71-53 comfortable victory. As for the ladies, they split in

The next night, they kicked it into gear, winning 45-30. The teams now will both travel to the Sitka Tournament this coming weekend for their first large test of games this season.

Laura Barnhill is the Nome Postmaster. In this story, she describes her childhood memories of Christmas in the Bethel area.

By Laura Barnhill

I was born in Bethel and was raised in Goodnews Bay, a small Yup'ik town on the coast between Bethel and Anchorage. Other than the schoolteachers, we were the only "white" kids in the village. Mom was half Yup'ik and half French Cana-

Grandpa Jean was one of the thousands that came to Nome in early 1900s for the Gold Rush. He was two weeks away from being ordained a Catholic priest in Quebec when he was stricken with gold fever and took the train to Seattle where he then boarded the steamship to Nome.

Grandpa found the gold but loved to just find it. He wandered all over and did lots of different things up here. I remember him talking of Nome, Council and Bonanza, racing dogs out of Ruby, and Big Swede and a $5.00 egg! Grandpa kept wandering and panning until he got to Goodnews Bay where he commissioned a cute little Eskimo lady to make a new pair of boots and a parka. He ended up marrying the fur sewer and settled down to raise Mom. He lived in a house next door to us until he died when I was eight. So, years later, I came to Nome to see the places that Grandpa talked and I found out that Sherrie's parents also had one of those silver tinsel trees with the revolving color wheel. Remember those from the 60s?

I remember the "assembling of the tree" day. First was the sourdough pancakes for breakfast. Mmmm! Then while Mom and the kids cleared and washed dishes, Dad would get out the boxes for the tree and the trimmings. Each branch on this tree was stored in a long paper tube like a huge roll of quarters. You had to grab the metal end and pull it out; even now I hear the "ssshpp' sound it would make. Each branch was color-coded. My brother and I would get to do the brown and black ones on the bottom because we were the littlest. My two sisters got the next two tiers, and then Mom and Dad would do the top.

We would then put on the decorations and the tinsel garland. Grandpa would put our lighted angel on top. We had to place it right in front of the window for all the other kids in the village to see.

Around the first of December the elders would go around with a coffee can filled with names of everyone in the village and stop at each house and the whole family would draw a name for a Christmas partner to buy a gift for. On Christmas Eve we would all go to church and they would read off the names on the gifts in front of the whole congregation. We would then march up to the front to get them. Most of the 350 villagers didn't have lots of money so the gifts were hand made or sometimes raw furs they had trapped.

If you were a kid you would always get some "awookuk," with your clothing gift. That means "little bit extra," and it would usually be a mini box of raisins or a candy bar. The Christmas partner thing was a good idea, because everyone got a present! Next up was the Christmas program and the beeswax candles when we sang carols.

Mom and Dad owned the store and would donate cases of oranges and hard candy for the treat bags we used for stockings. In good Yup'ik style it was always expected that if you got an article of clothing, you wore your Christmas gift the very next day to show your appreciation! I don't know if it was the hand knitted gifts we got, or the fact that we were children and were constantly on the move, but it seemed that Christmas was always warmer than

Christmas in Teller and Diomede: Games, dancing and presents for all

By Eva Menadelook

At our local school in Teller we'd be presented with a skit which involved all the students from each grade level. Each of us was selected by our teaching staff to a certain role. The more outspoken kids received the longer roles and characters. At the local church, which was the Lutheran Church at Teller, the Sunday school kids also practiced a skit for their religious preparations —the birth of Christ.

On Christmas Eve the school presented their skits to the waiting parents and extended family and friends. Each family brought gifts to be distributed right after the school play.

The next day the Lutheran Church presented their skits. At both events adults yelled out people's names as they distributed the gifts after the skits were done. Children waited anxiously for their names to be

Boys and girls and the entire community dressed in their Sunday best, the girls in dresses made by their mothers and a few folks ordered theirs via catalog- back in those days the notorious Sears Roebuck or Wards catalogs. Newly made parkas and mukluks were worn too. Men and women sang their Christmas Inupiaq songs (translated from English called, 'mumiktaks'). This was always my favorite part of the evening. The kids sang their songs, too.

All through the holiday the men walked house to house with gunny sacks asking for donations for the evening activities which would be games and Eskimo dancing. The donations would be used as prizes for the lucky participants who won a game. The prizes were things the family could afford to give away or no longer used. Some folks threw in canned goods or Sailor Boy crackers and cookies and even sewn items of fur hats and mittens were provided. I can still see Samual Okbaok at the door today with his gunny sack and huge warm smile, asking for a dona-

During the day the local men with dog teams got together and had their races and other men from the neighboring village of Brevig Mission would participate, too. All the village people watched the start and anxiously waited for the winner to return. Every year this was a local event for both communities. The stakes were set up for the path made

Someone took the time to go out gather willows and bring them all back to set up the race trail. The wind and snow storms never took the stakes down and they stayed up on the Grantley Harbor until the spring thaw and the ice went away out unto the Bering Sea.

Dogs were heard barking and yiping throughout the dog racing days. Men stood proudly near their sleds ready to leave as soon as the race marshal gave the go ahead.

In the evening the community arrived at the old school basement to play Eskimo games. There would be teams for many of the games. Men versus men or women versus women and kids were always involved too but mainly the adults played the majority of the games.

During the Christmas Eve and New Years Day the men gathered and drummed and people gathered to watch and participate. The children sat with attentive faces near their parents. No one dared to run around unless it was to the bathroom because our parents brought us home if we did not sit and respectfully watch the performances.

Samuel and Steve Okbaok, Moses Milligrock, and several other men beat the walrus skin drums for the community at Teller. One year they were a drum short so they constructed one from a galvanized 30 gallon tub.

I was fortunate to be at Little Diomede at one time in my life to witness one particular skit. The adults set up their own skit and performed it all speaking in their local dialect after the school plays. The adults gave an awesome performance and lots of laughter was heard throughout the room. Santa came and called out names to present a gift for every child. Prizes for games came from donations, too, on Diomede. Christmas Eve and New Year's Eve an Eskimo dance was held. The games for both communities Teller and Diomede were held each night from Christmas to New Years Eve. People came and participated. After the night's games the entire village was enveloped with adults and kids. Many people holding prizes they'd won. Laughter and smiles were heard and seen. Good nights and happy holidays can be heard on those still, clear, starry, moonlit nights.

There were also 'feasts' for each community. Everyone brought a favorite dish. All the food was local fish, reindeer, seal, walrus, oogruk, greens and Eskimo ice cream and that delicious fried bread. Each family brought a bag of utensils, bowls and plates. Imagine what it was like for those huge families! No paper plates or plastic utensils were seen! On Diomede some of the men baked bread and made cinnamon rolls. Everyone helped to be sure there was

My Dad said on Diomede close friends and relatives exchanged gifts all through each day of the holiday. Some gifts were just plain silly and fun, and others extravagant hunting equipment or sewn fur items. Holidays were surely a grand time for everyone. My Mom's father, John Ahkvaluk, did not have a gift to give to his friend, James Iyapana. So he gifted his Inupiaq song, an invitational Inupiaq dance song to his friend that he himself composed and I still hear this song sung and danced today at local Inupiaq dances. Gifts came from the heart back then as they do today.

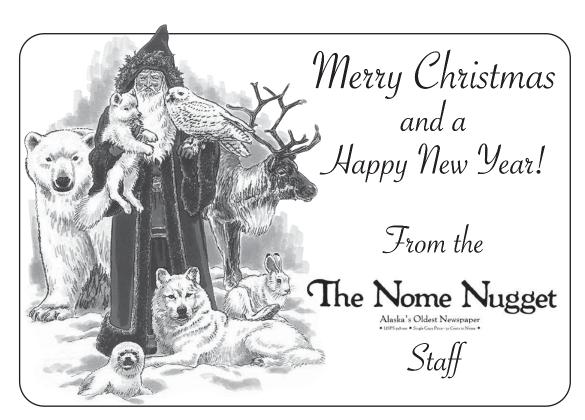

Christmas was certainly celebrated by everyone! Everything was just about handmade and the feast was from our own local resources from the sea and land. People volunteered and the entire community donated something to be sure that particular Christmas was celebrated. The church celebration was always the highlight of the holiday with those special Inupiaq songs sung by men and women, performances done in their own Inupiaq language, and then the Eskimo dances and indoor Eskimo games handed down from generation to generation with few 'new ones' added every now and then and outdoor games.

Take steps to enjoy the holidays without gaining weight

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Holiday weight gain can be prevented by taking a few simple steps...literally. Walking is one of the best ways to ALASKA FAMILY expend excess calories.

But you may be surprised DOCTOR at how many steps it takes to burn off one holiday

Weight gain results from excess calorie intake. Most people gain one pound for every 3,500 calories consumed above the amount needed for daily life. And even a conservative holiday dinner with basic trimmings and dessert can add 3, 500 calories in one meal alone.

Unless these extra calories are used in some physical activity they will be stored as triglycerides in fat cells throughout the body.

very slowly. The human body is designed to tightly balance the calories consumed with the calories expended in physical activity. A person who increases daily activity will inevitably desire to increase the calories consumed to replace what was expended during exercise. On the other hand, when a person eats a little extra, he or she will find ways to expend this energy with physical activity or an increased body temperature.

The balance is kept almost perfectly. However, the human body errs ever so slightly on the side of storing energy for later use. According to the NIH research, this extra ranges from just 31 calories a day for the majority of people up to 200 calories a day for about ten percent of people who are genetically predisposed to weight gain. During the holidays, we are socially wired to consume even higher amounts.

The bad news is that fat from holiday feasting tends to be deposited in the abdomen. This intra-abdominal fat is called visceral fat. Research shows that visceral fat has a profound negative effect on a person's risk of developing cardiovascular disease, insulin resistance, and dia-

Furthermore, visceral fat, as opposed to fat around the arms and legs, is the hardest to lose.

So how does a person enjoy the holiday meals without gaining health-threatening pounds? The lution may be a simple balance of calories and physical activity. An average person burns 100 calories by walking one mile. Therefore, a serving of turkey with dressing and gravy, which adds around 600 calories, can be burned by walking six miles. A slice of pumpkin pie that has around 150 calories requires another mile and one-half of walking. A person needs to walk around 35 miles to prevent weight gain from a traditional Christmas meal with all the trimmings and leftover snacking.

This distance may sound intimidating, but the miles do not have to be covered all at once. Short walks throughout the day add up. Walking outside, dressed in a parka, snow pants, and pack boots burns more calories than a walk on the treadmill. Activities that require more exertion like running, swimming, or crosscountry skiing burn calories at a higher rate.

A pedometer for counting daily steps can be helpful. Most people cover a mile in 2,000 steps. The American Heart Association and other experts recommend working up to 10,000 steps daily. At this rate, most people would be able to work off a holiday meal in about a week.

Someone will surely ask how many calories are burned during the obligatory post-meal nap. The answer is between 50 and 70 calories. That is just enough to work off the cookie you should have left for

Joyce "Pinaghaq" Gologergen

Joyce "Pinaghaq" Gologergen was born on November 17, 1960 to Reverend Timothy, Sr. and Anna Gologergen in Savoonga. She was the second youngest in the family. She left us peacefully on December 12, to be with our Lord.

Joyce grew up with many of her siblings and cousins in Savoonga

and then moved with her family to Nome, in May of 1970. Always a happy girl growing up, she was very close to her sisters and brothers and her many cousins and friends in Savoonga, Nome and Anchorage. A strong-willed child, she was always playing with her cousins.

While in grade school in Savoonga in the 1960s, she always took pride in doing the best she could, learning the teachings of her teacher and aunt, Ora Gologergen. She often talked of the day she received a big gold star from Ora. For doing such a great job on her schoolwork, Ora had placed a gold star on her forehead for all to see. She wore that gold star on her forehead the rest of the day, into the evening! She was so proud and humbled for doing what she did.

As a teenager, she quickly adjusted to living in Nome and maintained her ties to her family in Savoonga. There she went to school and worked in hotels, housekeeping, babysitting for family and friends. She gained many family friends and was kind and open hearted. She was quick-witted and had a way of making folks laugh—a great sense of humor! She loved everyone and everything. She was very wise and full of wisdom in her young age and was very independent, a beautiful child both inside and out. Her love for others was unconditional, whether they were rich or poor or homeless, she reached out to them in her own way. She taught others to be kind to each other and to never be mean for no reason. She was in the process of obtaining her GED, on which she worked hard.

She loved to do puzzles, crosswords, read books and loved to make beautiful cakes and amazing tasty foods, which she made in her own special way. She loved to practice her handwriting and drawing special flowers and also did some beautiful bead work. She made a beautiful wedding cake in October 2012 for her niece Raenelle's wedding reception. She loved to do special things for others and always made sure that everyone was OK and emotionally good. She never liked it when anyone was in a down mood and always made them smile and be in a better mood.

Her nieces and nephews and the newest ones, Jacob, Kiyler, Chanel June, Ana Mae, Tristen and Lindsey were very special to her. She loved each and every one of them in their very special way. Kiyler especially was her little companion at home, who kept her on her toes and reminded her of her very own personality, happy, independent and strong-willed and never running out of energy. She kept her going. She truly loved "lil mom" very much, who is named after mom's Yupik name. She was always a proud auntie and would often mention their names lovingly. She loved them all. She was very close to our mom, in that she gained knowledge, understanding, wisdom, and the correct way of speaking our Yupik language and cultural values from her.

She was married to George Long and together they had Colin. They all lived in San Jose, California for a time, where George's family was living. There, she learned the lifestyle and culture of her in-laws and really treasured the times she had with them.

Her proudest time was when her sons Kyle and Amos graduated from high school and Colin's schooling in the Culinary Arts. She was happiest of her daughter TiAna. A proud mother, she once said that she was flying like an angel around them! She dearly loved each one.

Joyce was close to her cousin June Annogiyuk and her children. She was proud to be babysitting "her" girls, Kayli, Jada and Rhiana. She would often comment that those girls have our personalities and our traits. She made a point of teaching them responsibilities and most of all letting them be themselves. They were all very special to her.

Joyce will be greatly missed by her children, especially her sons and daughter. Her sisters Linda, June and Rosali were very close to her. She was truly saddened when she lost her sister Julie and her brother Russell, whom she loved very much.

Saying it Sincerely

Rev. Karen Sonray of Our Savior Lutheran Church Member of the Nome Ministerial Association

Just a week before Christmas, our nation reels with the senseless violence and loss of life in the recent shootings at Sandy Hook elementary school in Newtown, Connecticut. We may never know why. We do know these things should never happen, especially near Christmas. Yet they do.

Jarred by this recent tragedy, I was reminded that even the joyful Christmas story is wrapped in the trauma of death. King Herod is disturbed because three wise men from the East are looking for a child destined to be king of the Jews whose star has risen in the sky. Joseph is warned in a dream that his child Jesus is in danger and flees with his family to Egypt, but Herod orders the slaughter of innocent children, two-year-old boys. His motive? Most likely fear and his need of control. This horrendous story (found in Matthew 2: 13- 18) ends with a heart-wrenching lament: "A voice is heard in Ramah, weeping and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children and refusing to be comforted because they are no more." It is a universal cry.

Jesus was born into this sort of danger himself. God sent his son into what can be a very ugly world filled with pain and grief. God knew this and sent his son anyway, vulnerable and straight into the hands of people who had power to hurt, betray, reject and kill Jesus.

God so loved the world that he gave his son. That is what Christmas is about. God mourns with us in the midst of these recent events and in all unspeakable sorrows. According to the International Children's Fund, the world loses a child every three seconds! In Syria we are told over the past 21 months, over 40,000 people have died, many of them innocent children. And we must admit that in our own society violence tends to be sensationalized in games, movies and television.

We need community – all people do. It is in community we can gain a sense of whether or not our feelings and ideas are distorted; we experience relationships that will support us and give feedback so we do not get stuck in patterns of rage, self-loathing and anger.

Let us pray to God to help us build relationships and a new sense of community. Let us pray for God to console the families in Newtown and all those who mourn. Let us pray for a spiritual strength that is resilient and rises above violence.

God comes down from heaven in the baby Jesus to bring a joy that is stronger than fear. May our lives experience that joy even in the face of loss. God's gift of forgiveness and reconciling love can transform our world. Let it begin with us.

Joyce "Pinaghaq" also leaves behind many beloved cousins, uncles, aunts, nieces and nephews on her father's and mother's side, whom she loved, cared and cherished equally. She was loved dearly and will be greatly missed by all.

Dear Editor

While working as a law enforcement officer in a remote Alaskan village, I had the occasion to arrest many people for many things, but one sticks in my mind more than any other. It sums up most of everything that I can see wrong with the current Alaskan society.

The arrest occurred in early spring, while the temperatures outside were about -15°F. I was called to a small shack where six people were living in conditions that were more from a third world country than from a modern, civilized society. The single room shack was about 250 square feet in size, with a mat on the floor, and a horribly dirty and disgusting couch against the wall. The hovel did not have running water or sewer. The cupboards did not have doors, and the shelves were empty. Any space on the floor that was not occupied by an intoxicated person was covered, or rather, piled with garbage with a terrible acrid smell. Despite the abhorrent living conditions, there was an apparently brand new fifty inch, or larger, plasma screen TV with a DVD player, and a PlayStation hooked up to it.

One of the occupants of the room had a warrant for his arrest, so I put the handcuffs on him, and took him outside. Because of the nature of law enforcement in the villages, I had to walk with him to the makeshift jail at the edge of town. There was nobody available to serve as a jail guard, so I had to perform that task.

The young man was about 19 years old, and quite intoxicated. He was wearing clothing that, if he was in a city with a gang, would identify him as a gang member. As a lot of drunks do, he was running his mouth, acting as if he was an actual gang member, despite the fact that he had never lived outside the village of about 500 people. I had previously worked in more urban areas, and had dealt with actual gangsters, so, he just seemed stupid to me. I chose not to tell him that, but kept quiet for several hours, until he began to sober

The more the alcohol cleared from his body, the more I was able to converse with him in a non-confrontational way. Once clear headed, the young man seemed intelligent and surprisingly articulate. While waiting for an airplane to take him to the jail in a larger city, we had several hours to talk. We started talking openly and honestly about all sorts of topics. Finally, I felt that he was in a mood to answer a question honestly, and without bravado. So I asked, "What are you going to do with your life?" He looked me square in the eyes, and thought for several seconds. He replied "I'll tell you what I'm going to do. I'm going to sit on my couch. I'm going to play my PlayStation. I'm going to get high, and you're going to pay me for it."

I was taken aback for a moment, and didn't know what to say. He caught me off guard. When I got my thoughts back in order, we talked for a little while more about what he said. He told me that as a native Alaskan, he is able to make the equivalent of $25 an hour from various state and federal welfare programs, and that he wouldn't have to work for the rest of his life. Because he didn't have to work, he dropped out of school. He planned on doing only the things that he liked, which was playing his PlayStation, and getting high from alcohol and marijuana. "You don't need an education for that" he said. I tried to get him to realize that there was more to life, and the world; and that he should go out and see it. He said that he had all that he wanted, and as soon as he got out of jail, he was going to continue the way of life he had chosen.

The airplane arrived, I took him to the jail, and never saw him again. I left the area, but that young man's apathy has stuck with me. It bothers me deeply, because since that conversation, I have seen the same attitude over and over and over. It's my belief that the current welfare state is destroying an entire society, and culture. There are several areas that are contributing to the demise of Native Alaskans, these are: Education, Motivation, Welfare, Alcohol and Drug

In Alaska, the average graduation rate is 67 percent. Meaning that of the students that begin school, only 67 percent graduate from high school. However, in the Lower Yukon School District, for an example, the "School Report Card" found on the State of Alaska website, shows that slightly more than 90 percent of students tested, scored "Below Average" with the vast majority of those scoring "Far Below Average." Students in the same district had only 30 percent math proficiency, and 32 percent proficiency in language arts. The graduation rate in that district is 54 percent. But one must wonder, how many of those graduates are graduating with a "high school level" education if 90 percent are below average.

Some may blame it on the state for not providing enough resources for education to the school districts, but I highly doubt that. Russian Mission, in the Lower Yukon School District recently received a brand new school, with a cost of approximately $23.6 million. The school averages about 100 students enrolled, from ages 3 and up. With a 54 percent graduation rate, that equates to about 4.5 graduates per year. The school is designed to last approximately 30 years; for a total of 135 graduates. That equates to about $175,000 per graduate just for the initial building cost. That does not include paying for heat, electricity, internet, phones, supplies or teachers. Add all of that in and the dollar amount for the state and federal government to produce one high school graduate is astound-

Some may blame the poor performance on the teaching staff. But, according to the State of Alaska website, 100 percent of the teachers are considered "highly qualified".

With that being said, I can only come up with two possible explanations. Alaskan Natives are of subnormal intelligence, or they do not value the educational opportunities that they have. I certainly don't think that Alaskan Natives are of less than normal intelligence, so, I think that they just don't care. This leads me into the next area that is contributing to the demise of these people— Motivation, or rather, the lack of motivation to succeed.

The young man I mentioned at the beginning of this article made it plain that all he had to do was sit around, and he would get paid. People, all people, tend towards laziness. That isn't a bad thing necessarily. A survival characteristic in nature is conservation of energy. Any animal in nature conserves as much energy as possible, because efficiency leads to survival when times are lean. We all want something for nothing if we can get it. So why get an education? Why work? Why do anything at all, if you don't have to? As that young man demonstrated, all he has to do is sit on his couch, play his Playstation, and all of his needs would be met. Education, who needs it? This leads me to another area of concern: Wel-

That young man told me that he could make the equivalent of $25 per hour from state and federal welfare programs. After researching a bit, I found that the average welfare household in the United States makes the equivalent of $30.60 per hour. That number comes from the Senate Budget Committee's ranking member, Jeff Sessions research. The interesting thing about that figure, is that it is not taxed, and is above the median income for the United States which is $25.03 per hour. The working individual makes less money overall, and has to pay taxes on what he makes. Sounds like welfare pays, and that young man I met in the village has a fairly solid plan.

Finally, what does an individual do when they don't have to work. They sit on their couches, and play their PlayStations. Then, when that gets boring, what would make it more fun? Have you ever played "God of War" while stoned? I haven't, but I bet it's a whole new experience. Slowly but surely the drug and alcohol abuse leads to a more and more apathetic outlook on life. There is no joy, there is nothing to strive for, and life becomes unlivable. Ever wonder why the suicide rate for Native Alaskans is nearly six times that of people in the lower 48? I have investigated a fair number of suicides during my time in law enforcement. In Western Alaska, I have yet to investigate a suicide death of a native male that has not included two facts: They were unemployed, and under the influence of alcohol and, or drugs at the time.

By no means do I have all the answers, but I can clearly see that a subsistence lifestyle isn't compatible with a consumer lifestyle. Subsistence requires work in the outdoors to gather food, and supplies to survive. A consumer lifestyle requires work at a job to earn money to buy food and supplies to survive. So, it boils down to if you want a "subsistence life" do it like your ancestors did for thousands of years: without 50 inch plasma screens, and snowmachines. If you want a 50 inch plasma, and iPhone, get an education, move to Anchorage, and get a job. The free stuff has only made you a slave to whatever political system promises the most free stuff. Free yourselves. Choose a way of life that provides you with goals, aspirations, and a reason to get out of bed in the morning.

I recently left my job in law enforcement, and finally feel free to express my personal feelings on these issues. My personal experiences are not in any way intended to express the views of any other law enforcement officer or agency. They are my personal views only, and obtained through extensive experience working in bush Alaska.
